Frankie Swift, an important errand boy at the Ranstead street store of the Joseph Heacock Co., died from influenza, October 25. He was a faithful boy, always willing and on the job.

The trade, particularly growers, are elated by the news from Washington that there is now an abundance of coal on hand all over the country, and also that private consumers have their winter supply laid in to a greater extent than ever before at this season. Florists and manufacturers are given notice that they can store all the anthracite they wish below the No. 1 buckwheat. Dealers of late have been very free with their offerings, so that it looks as if growers can soon have all the hard or soft coal they want of any size or grade.

W. H. Wanger, 1635 Susquehanna avenue, said that during the recent rush period he always contrived to have one day's stock of flowers ahead. This gave the roses and lilies a chance to open, enabling him to make the most of them. The rule here is to always have a good number of staple designs, such as pillows and wreaths, mossed up and in stock, and this had been a great help when the rush set in. Well-made magnolia wreaths were a feature here.

Leo Niessen, in sizing up the situation, finds that the supply and demand are now about equal, with a range of prices about one-third higher than last season. There is a good out-of-town trade, as in some directions they were slower to feel the effects of the influenza. Excellent chrysanthemums, roses, carnations and Easter lilies are features here.

The November meeting of the florists' club will be held Tuesday, November 5, the ban on all meetings, theatres, etc., being lifted by the health authorities, October 30. J. Otto Thilow's talk on "The Florist's Business in War-time," taking in as far back as the early sixties, will be the feature. The newly elected officers will also be installed.

The influenza sufferers are out of danger, but coming along slowly. James Heacock, while still in bed, is making good headway. Clarence Watson and Robert Bragg are improving but still confined to the house. Charles Grakelow is about the house, but still he says a little shaky on his pins.

William C. Wanner has a very attractive corner shop at 19th and Susquehanna avenue. He had a record-breaking business for the past month, but it is now almost down to normal.

Exceptionally fine double cosmos in all colors was a feature of the Berger Bros' stock the past week. Business had fallen off a trifle, but there was still a good demand.

The Philadelphia Wholesale Florists' Exchange had the misfortune to have their bulk window smashed last week through careless handling of shipping boxes in the street.

The sympathy of the trade goes out to Walter Van den Hengle in the loss of his daughter, Annie, a bright girl of 14, by diphtheria, the past week.

William Leonard's shipment of roses for Monday last was over 12,000 buds. His Double White Killarneys are particularly fine.

The shipments of roses from Rolefs are increasing daily with the Joseph Heacock Co. The Columbia is now their leader.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—The Texas State Florists' Association will hold its convention and flower show in this city, November 19-21.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The business of W. W. Kimmel, 1139 Fourteenth street, N. W., now in the government service, has been purchased by the Florida Fruit & Flower Co.

STRONG DEMAND AT GOOD PRICES.

The call for flowers suitable for funeral work continues and prices remain firm, but special roses are slow, unless they are quoted at approximately the same figures as extras. Large chrysanthemums are particularly slow, and unless there is a speedy improvement in the demand, it is hard to tell what will become of all of them. There is a good supply of orchids on the market and they do not clean up very well. With the increase of large chrysanthemums there is also a great increase in the supply of pompons, and, in proportion, they move better than the large stock. The supply of carnations is on the increase, but prices hold firm at $6 to $8 per 100. Lilies, as a matter of course, are in demand and do not go below 20 cents per flower, wholesale. On account of the scarcity, poor quality and high price of lily of the valley, many retailers seem to have dropped it and the best keeps around $10 per 100. Mignonette in considerable quantity is seen in some of the stores, also sweet peas, but the latter are short and not in sufficient quantity to be factors in the market. A cold wave that was predicted for the night of October 24 did not arrive, and at this writing the weather continues fair and mild, with continued arrivals of dahlias, cosmos and other outdoor stock, but the cosmos is rather slow. Briefly stated, funeral work is all that is making a market.

October 28.—As a result of the mild weather of the past two weeks, a heavier supply of greenhouse stock is arriving. Under any conditions, there would have been a fair supply of chrysanthemums, but the warm weather has hastened them, as well as roses, carnations and lilies. The dahlias are about cut out, only small lots arriving. Prices are easier today, and if mild weather continues, stock is likely to be cheaper, at least, while the chrysanthemums are arriving in large quantities, though there is yet a heavy demand for funeral stock.

NOTES.

In view of the possibility of a scarcity of flowers, suggestions are being made as to the best methods to be pursued by retail florists. The misfortune of this epidemic that is sweeping the country has thrown much business to the retail florists at a time when all the previous indications were that fall business would be dull. In this contingency the florists should take note of the human as well as the business side of life. The retail florists are paying high prices for their flowers, but they should be as reasonable as possible with their customers of moderate means. Death in a family, as we all know, is a calamity and involves heavy expense to many who are ill able to bear it. Yet, it is always the desire of warm-hearted people to provide some final floral tribute. The present are unusual conditions and the florists should remember that it is calamity that is sending them this additional business, therefore we say that they should be as reasonable as possible. The retail florist must have a profit.

but instead of exploiting this unusual and mournful visitation, he should try to give his customers what they want at prices consistent with fair business.

Borough President Connolly of Queens sent a letter October 24 to Mayor Hylan saying that there were 2,000 bodies unburied in Queens cemeteries and asking the mayor to send city workers to dig graves. Mr. Connolly expressed a fear that if the bodies are not buried soon the spread of Spanish influenza might be increased. Long Island City, Astoria, Elmhurst and Middle Village are included in the Borough of Queens. In explanation of the foregoing, it should be stated that there are a number of large cemeteries in the borough, notably at Middle Village, where about 30 small florist establishments derive their income almost altogether from cemetery work, and there are many burials there of persons who have died in other boroughs.

In our notes of October 26 we estimated, on general knowledge, that the death rate of this city was four or five times that of the corresponding period of last year. Dr. Guilfooy, registrar of records of the health department, has since confirmed our estimate. His figures show that for the week ending October 19, 1917, the deaths per thousand from all causes were 12.20; for the week ending October 19, 1918, from all causes the death rate was 50.34 per thousand. This enormous increase was due solely to influenza and pneumonia. Dr. Guilfoyle states that: "It may be safely conceded that this is the worst epidemic that New York City has ever had."

The next meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held on the evening of November 11. The by-laws provide that the nominating committee "shall prepare a list of candidates for officers of the club for the ensuing year, not less than two nominees to be named for each office." These names are to be announced at the November meeting. The election will take place at the December meeting. For the November meeting, there is, we believe, to be a lecture on the work of the Arnold Arboretum, which was postponed from the October meeting on account of the Liberty Loan drive.

Doubtless some of the seedsmen who attended the twenty-fifth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association held at the Hotel Astor, this city, June 25-27, 1907, will remember the genial proprietor of that hotel, William C. Muschenheim. He died of pneumonia in the Post-Graduate hospital, October 25, aged 63 years. He was a past-master of Adelphi Lodge, 348, A. F. & A. M., and a member of a number of clubs and societies.

It is stated that Mayor Hylan has asked for the resignation of Park Commissioner Grell of Manhattan because he leased the Casino in Central Park without consulting the mayor. All that we have heard of improving the parks since Mayor Hylan took office has been the cutting down of some dead trees, but there is plenty of peanut politics.

The newspapers report that a "nut drive" is on at Hot Springs, Va., and that prominent society people are out almost every day gathering nuts. They should come to New York and gather in the "nuts" who are saying that the election to the governorship of a member of the faculty of Tammany hall would be "support" for President Wilson.

George Hildenbrand, of John Young & Co., has received a postal card from Michael Andropoulos, who is at Camp Greenleaf, near Chattanooga, Tenn., saying he had been very ill with influenza. He was one of the "Garden Florists" who have two retail stores on Broadway.

Otto Emmanuel has bought out the interest of S. J. Kracke in the retail store at 3613 Broadway, near 149th street, and is conducting it under his own name. Kracke, who is in the army, is on duty at one of the base hospitals.

Major Bonnaffon and pink and white Lillian Doty chrysanthemums. The Dotys are very acceptable additions when there is so much call for funeral stock.

Down near the foot of Cortlandt street, Adams & Demas have established a good retail business. Their store is well stocked with ferns and other plants and catches the eyes and custom of the commuters.

Mrs. John Manolos, the death of whose husband was recorded in our issue of October 19, survived him only five days, being taken by the same disease. Their little child is being cared for by relatives.

Peter Cosmas, who has a good store at 2107 Third avenue, near 110th street informs us that for the past three weeks he has had a constant rush of funeral work.

Gerard Dreyer, the well-known plantman of Whitestone, L. I., lost a little son, five years old, by pneumonia, October 21. Both the parents have been ill.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., is in the city. He visited President Totty at Madison, N. J., and called on a number of the 28th street wholesalers.

Boucheros Brothers have a good store at 1418 St. Nicholas avenue, Washington Heights, and have been greatly rushed with funeral work.

Jack, the Florist, 3604 Broadway, has been showing enterprise by having chrysanthemum sales on Saturdays, when the crowd is out.

The Henshaw Floral Co., in addition to their fine stock, is handling excellent blooms of the white chrysanthemum, October Queen.

H. W. Baker, father of Henry Alfred Baker, for many years a salesman in the wholesale district, died October 23, aged 79 years.

NO LETUP IN FUNERAL WORK.

Business still "carries on," the big run of funeral work continuing, the supply being kept well cleaned up and often short of actual needs. Chrysanthemums are now arriving in large quantities and are of extra grade, ranging in price from 50 to 75 cents each to $3 per dozen. Roses in Ophelia, Russell and the Killarneys are also good. Carnations are improving and dahlias are still among the offerings.

NOTES.

W. J. Barnes has been practically swamped with orders all of the time with the call for hospital flowers unusually heavy. He is cutting large quantities of good white and yellow chrysanthemums, roses and dahlias.

Samuel Murray reports fancy material is moving fast, large quantities being moved daily. He has had many orders for funeral and hospital flowers.

H. Kusik & Co. report another very good week's business, both local and shipping. They carry a large stock of chrysanthemums and roses.

T. J. Noll reports the best business in the history of the firm, at this time of the year. They are handling many fine chrysanthemums and roses.

The William L. Rock Flower Co. is making a big cut of chrysanthemums, roses and carnations. Business has been unusually good.

Charles Thomas, of the Rosery, reports better business at prices above normal, his greatest difficulty being to get sufficient stock.

Arthur Newell says he is more than satisfied with business. He had orders for many fine baskets and large pieces.

A. F. Barbe reports an excellent retail trade which results in a daily cleanup.

The Seed Trade

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendell, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held June, 1918.

SPINACH is quoted lower.

REPORTS on seed crops show reduced yields in both clover and timothy.

GOSSIP now has it that Dutch cargo ships may be in service again soon.

It is reported that the Belgian government has ordered 2,000 incubators.

ONION SEEDS are quiet in the Chicago district, open-car shipments being about finished.

THE first snow of the season is reported from Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas, October 26-27.

The jobbing demand for bulbs, as well as counter trade has been very brisk since the stock arrived.

THE annual meeting of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League will be held at the Hardware Club, New York, November 14.

A. HENDERSON, of A. Henderson & Co., and President Miller, of the American Bulb Co., Chicago, returned from New York, October 30.

THE southern half of Cook county, Illinois, produces, in addition to onion sets, liberal quantities of sugar beets in the Riverdale-Dalton district.

DOUGLAS EARL, son of Howard M. Earl, of F. W. Bolgiano & Co., Washington, D. C., is now a second lieutenant in the American forces in France.

CAMBRIDGE, N. Y.—Charles P. Gueff, representing the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., of this city, is now making his headquarters at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade October 30 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.50 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Thomas A. Ross, for the past four years store manager for Chris. Reuter, and widely known in the trade of this country and Scotland, died of influenza, October 16, age 32 years.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The meeting of the Western Seedsmen's Association, scheduled to have been held in this city, October 26, was postponed, due to the seriousness of the influenza epidemic.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover opened steady October 29, closing at $23.75, a gain of 95 cents during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents lower, selling at $4.97½; December, $5.07½, March $5.30, and April $5.30.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—The Bay Counties Seed Co. was the first firm in this city to receive bulbs and is very busy filling orders. Nursery prospects for the coming season are very promising.

Burlap Prices Fixed.

Washington, D. C.—Maximum prices for burlap in carload lots, to be effective October 4 to February 1, were established October 26, by the war industries board. For 40 inch 8 ounce burlap 13.6 cents is to be charged on the Pacific coast and 14 cents at Atlantic and gulf ports, with prices of other sizes and weights in proportion.

Philadelphia Seed Trade.

The Dutch and French bulbs have finally arrived at destination, and the principal importing firms are at their wits' ends in filling orders. The H. F. Michell Co. has called in their men off the road to help in this important distribution. Every inch of space in the store is piled high with cases, many of which are going out in the original packages. The shipments of two large Holland growers have not yet arrived, and it is hoped will not be long delayed. Philip Freund, who has charge of the window decorations, has one filled with a popcorn demonstration showing a couple of Japanese figures popping corn over a fire. Quantities of the corn are sold through this method of attracting attention.

Henry A. Dreer, Inc., are so swamped with bulb orders, owing to their late arrival, that they have had to close their store for several days and use the entire force to catch up in this department. An attractive display of pumpkins and squashes are a feature of one of the Chestnut street windows.

New York Seed Trade.

From an authoritative source it is learned that the capture by the Allies of the important bases on the Belgian coast will give much greater freedom to Dutch shipping. It is unlikely, however, that any Dutch ships will arrive on this side with bulbs this season.

Isidore A. Figlik, late with the A. T. Boddington Co., has entered the employ of the United States government and will be stationed in the department of military aeronautics at Garden City, L. I., N. Y.

We have been advised that the business of Ralph M. Ward & Co. will be continued by the men who were associated with Mr. Ward previous to his death.

Patrick O'Mara, of Peter Henderson & Co., has returned from a western trip looking well, and says he greatly enjoyed it.

S. D. Woodruff & Sons, who are large dealers in potatoes, have recently been shipping them to Cuba.

A. Henderson, of Chicago, who has been visiting this city, started for home, October 29.

F. H. Henry, of Henry & Lee, is reported on the sick list, October 30, with pleurisy.

Gilroy Over the Top.

L. W. Wheeler, of the Pieters-Wheeler Seed Co., of Gilroy, Calif., should be accorded the rank of ace for his patriotic service and tireless effort as chairman of the precinct in the recent Liberty Loan campaign. Gilroy's quota was $232,000, which was quickly oversubscribed, the total being $296,500, of which amount nearly $100,000 is traceable to Mr. Wheeler's efforts. The Pieters-Wheeler Seed Co. and its employees were liberal subscribers, many plus purchases being recorded.

Forage Plant Seed Imports.

The United States department of agriculture, bureau of plant industry, has announced imports of forage plant seeds during the three months ending September 30, 1918, compared with 1917 as follows:

Kind of seed.	Quarter ending Sept. 30, 1917.	Quarter ending Sept. 30, 1918.

Drafting Farmers.

Ruling on the claim of a farmer who had three sisters, John Callahan, at Topeka, Kan., a government draft inspector, held that men on farms well provided with feminine workers are not to be exempted on agricultural grounds. Callahan decided the women were capable of running the farm, and the man was placed in Class 1.

Quarantine Regulations on Jap Beetle.

The Japanese beetle having made its appearance in New Jersey, the secretary of agriculture has placed a quarantine on the infected area, effective June 1, 1919, after which date green corn shall not be moved interstate to any point outside of the territory covered by the regulations, until certified free from Japanese beetle.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, October 29.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $1.50 to $2.35; celery, crate, 50 to 85 cents; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.00 to $2.00; radishes, per 100 bunches $2.00 to $3.00; tomatoes, per box, 50 cents to $1.00.

New York, October 28.—Celery (state), per bunch, 15 to 60 cents; cucumbers, 75 cents to $1.25 per dozen; mushrooms, $1.00 to $2.00 per basket; tomatoes, per carrier, 50 cents to $2.50; lettuce, per package, 25 cents to $1.50; radishes, per 100 bunches, $1.50 to $2.50.

Grand Rapids Forcing Tomato.

The Jones Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., is offering the Grand Rapids Forcing tomato, a variety with a splendid record on the Grand Rapids market. This tomato has been grown extensively under glass in that district with unusual success during the past three or four years. The fruit is a brilliant red, round and smooth, and of good medium size. The plant is of vigorous growth and so productive that some clusters need support. For shipping, it is said to be superior to any other variety. Eugene Davis, the well-known market gardening specialist, says it is the most profitable forcing tomato he has ever known, disease resisting and absolutely self-fertilizing.

Vegetable and Fruit Markets.

The bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, in its report for the period October 22-28, shows a fairly steady condition, both in movement and prices. In the potato markets, the prices were somewhat irregular with western markets weaker than eastern. Minnesota and Wisconsin No. 1 sacked whites lost 20 cents and closed at Chicago at $1.80-$1.90 per 100 pounds in carlots. Minnesota Red River Ohios were firm at $1.60-$1.85 sacked trackside. Green Mountains were fairly steady at $3-$3.25 per barrel in bulk at Presque Isle. New York round whites were $2.25-$2.65 per 100 pounds in consuming markets. Cabbage values held at about the same level as the previous week, although most changes were in the downward direction. New York Domestic still held at $9-$11 per ton in bulk at Rochester and Danish Seed declined $1, ranging $15-$17 in consuming markets. Wisconsin Danish Seed sold to jobbers in the Chicago district at $28. Colorado stock was steady at 90 cents to $1 per 100 pounds at Greeley and $1.25-$1.50 at Kansas City. Onions were in a somewhat firmer position than the preceding week with conditions slightly improved at eastern shipping points. Prices held steady, ranging $1.30-$1.50 per 100 pounds at Rochester, sacked, and $1.40-$1.60 Northampton, Mass. Consuming markets quote $1.25-$1.75 in the east and $1.25-$2 in the middle-west. In beans, Colorado pintos declined to $6 per 100 pounds to growers at Greeley and ranged $8.25-$9.15 for jobbing sales at Denver. Carlots in southwestern markets ruled $7.75 per 100 pounds. California small whites were held at $10 per 100 pounds to growers. California limas declined sharply at shipping points, the range being $10-$10.50 per 100 pounds to growers. Michigan No. 1 washed white celery held at 14-17 cents per dozen at Kalamazoo. In consuming markets the price ranged from 90 cents to $1.50 per case, Colorado Golden Hearts in the rough ranged $3.25-$5.25 per case, New York Golden Hearts, $3-$3.25.

In the apple markets, most changes were in the upward direction and the tone was generally firm. Prices were as follows: Baldwins and Greenings, A-2½, $4.25-$4.50 f. o. b. Rochester, some fancy lots reaching $4.75; New York Baldwins, A-2½, $4.75-$6.75 in consuming markets; Greenings, $4.75-$5.75; Virginia Yorks, $4.50-$6 in consuming markets. Extra fancy northwestern and Colorado boxed Jonathans ranged unchanged in consuming markets at $3-$3.25. The general range for choice Massachusetts cranberry stock of the early varieties was $7.10 per barrel. At Chicago, late varieties were $9.10, New Jersey berries followed a general range of $7-$9 per barrel and $2.25-$3.75 per box.

Nashville, Tenn.

SUPPLY NOW MEETS REQUIREMENTS.

Flowers are arriving daily in greater and ever-increasing abundance. The chrysanthemums are on in all their glory, magnificent specimen flowers in white, pink and yellow, gorgeous premium sizes, and bringing from $6 to $10 a dozen. Roses, too, have attained a degree of perfection rarely, if ever, surpassed. The Russell, with some of the growers, are superb, and with others the Columbia is the favorite. Carnations are showing more profusely and reaching a fine stage of perfection. Violets are blooming well in out-of-door and open spaces, at this season, requiring no protection whatever. The season has been very favorable for the chrysanthemum as grown in home gardens and family front yards. These have come in in great perfection and have helped out the flower situation considerably, for many of the white varieties were as good as the greenhouse grown and are very fine for funeral work. While the demand is still exceptionally good, there is not the rush of a week or so ago, and there are plenty of flowers now to fill all orders, but every day there is a good clean up. The new bulbs are beginning to come in, the hyacinths and tulips. The pay-roll question is getting to be a serious one, more than double what it was formerly, and climbing all the time. This and the scarcity of coal naturally advances the price of flowers.

NOTES.

Thomas H. Joy, of the Joy Floral Company, left for Chattanooga, October 26, for a couple of days' visit and inspection. The store there is doing a booming business, keeping this end of the line busy with the supply. The company is still busy, not quite so much so as a week or two ago, but as there is a much better cut and a larger supply, they have been able to wholesale a lot of roses and chrysanthemums. Of the latter, they have a superb assortment of massive size and perfection of growth, for which the best of prices are obtained. They are cutting daily a choice lot of carnations, plenty of roses, and a generous supply of chrysanthemums. They have a choice lot of chrysanthemum plants, and the first on sale of cyclamen. Godfrey Johnson, former rose grower with the Joy Floral Company, has returned and re-engaged with them in that capacity, after an absence of some months in Lima, Ohio. Miss Nellie Joy, a sister, is seriously ill with influenza, while another sister, Miss Lillian Joy, and their mother are going through with an attack of the same disease.

Hugh McIntyre, of the McIntyre Floral Company, has entirely recovered from a prolonged and very serious attack of influenza, which confined him to his bed for over a month. The firm is having very handsome chrysanthemums, for some of which they are getting $8 and $10 a dozen. They also have a fine lot of orchids, selling at $2 each, for which they have fine sales as corsage bouquets and an occasional bridal bouquet. Their chrysanthemum plants are fine and selling well. They are showing some of the finest Russells and Columbias in the market. Their carnations are very good for the season, and there are plenty of them. Their growing operations are confined entirely to the newer and more up-to-date range of greenhouses on the Murfreesboro road. They have found their up-town store located on Broadway, in the West End section, a very paying investment and have all they can do. They are also growing superb dahlias of every color and variety.

Geny Bros. are busy all the time and are getting in a splendid cut of carnations, roses and chrysanthemums, which are selling from $4 to $6 and $8 per dozen. Roses are selling from $2 to $5 per dozen. Their chrysanthemum plants are in great demand and are very good.

The Mount Olivet Greenhouses have an abundant supply of chrysanthemums and geraniums. They confine their trade to the cemetery sales which takes up all they can grow with the limited help obtainable.

Perennials for Cut Flowers.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:

Will you kindly give me the names of the eight best varieties of perennials suitable for cut flowers during the summer months? The stock is to be planted in front of beds of shrubs.

Indiana.

H. H. F.

Among the best perennials for cut flower purposes are Coreopsis lanceolata, Delphinium Belladonna, D. elatum hybridum in variety, Gaillardia grandiflora, Gypsophila paniculata, Hemerocallis Florham, Phlox Miss Lingard, Platycodon grandiflora and Veronica longifolia subsessilis.

Mountain Ashes.

Many of these trees are now growing well in the Arboretum, and some of them are unusually full of fruit this year and handsome and interesting objects. Mountain ashes have leaves divided into numerous narrow leaflets, compact clusters of white flowers which are followed by scarlet, yellow, orange-colored, pink or white, usually globose fruit which varies from a quarter to three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The best known and most commonly planted of these trees in the United States in the European Sorbus Aucuparia, the Rowan tree of Scotland. It is a tree from 40 to 60 feet tall, of pyramidal habit while young, with erect branches which, as the tree grows older, spread out into a broad and graceful head. Here the leaves retain their color until the autumn is far advanced, and during September and October the contrast between the bright green leaves and the drooping clusters of brilliant red fruit make this tree an attractive object until the birds strip it of its fruit. This mountain ash is common and widely distributed over the cooler parts of Europe, and was probably early introduced into North America, where it has been much planted in the extreme northern states and in Canada. Several varieties are recognized. The handsomest of these is the Moravian mountain ash (var. moraviae or dulcis) of northern Austria. This is tall tree with a smooth stem, leaves with narrower leaflets than those of the type and larger and sweeter fruit. It is used as food in central Europe. This mountain ash has grown in the Arboretum very rapidly and promises to become a large tree. Two specimens in the plantation near the top of Peter's hill are now covered with fruit and are among the handsomest of the small trees in the Arboretum. There are forms of the Rowan tree with pendulous branches (var. pendula) and with fastigate branches (var. fastigiata). There is a form with yellow fruit and a variety from eastern Europe (var. lanuginosa) the leaves of which are covered on the upper surface with stiff hairs and are downy on the lower surface.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, October 18, 1918.

Imported Nursery Stock.

Norman Taylor, editor of the International Garden Club Journal, writes in the New York Evening Post, as follows:

"The federal horticultural board soon takes final action to stop the importation of nursery stock into this country. Practically all ornamental shrubs and trees will be excluded after July 1, 1919, if the board carries through its programme. Because the extent of this importation and what will follow its too sudden stoppage are not fully realized, I beg a little space to protest against the proposed scheme.

"Ninety per cent of the ornamental shrubs and trees in American gardens were imported in the young state from Holland, Belgium and France. Because of the possibility of introducing pests, the board proposes to stop such importations. This may, in the opinion of the board, warrant the drastic measures proposed, but until American nurserymen, who have vainly protested, are in a position to propagate their own stock, the supply should not be cut off. It would take at least five years for the nurseries to accommodate themselves to this action, and they are willing to do it, as there is no question of the board's competency. It is merely a question of making haste slowly.

"Every owner of a country place or others interested in maintaining the beauty of American landscapes should send word at once that they are opposed to any action that will bring about such a condition as is outlined in the preceding paragraph. Letters or telegrams should be sent to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, chairman, Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

"The exclusion of shrubs and trees from France and Belgium may, just at this juncture, be open to an interpretation by our Allies that, while not true, seems to me to be avoided. Is it not possible that the board, in its zeal to protect us from pests, has proposed something for which neither we nor our Allies are quite ready?"

Fort Wayne, Ind.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS RELIEVE SHORTAGE.

Relief from the great scarcity of stock came last week when a fine large crop of chrysanthemums came on, supplemented by a good supply of roses. The unprecedented demand for funeral work continued throughout the week, and kept all hands busy making up designs, and filling orders. Hospital flowers were in excellent demand, also, and counter trade was exceedingly lively. Casket blankets were sent out in large numbers by the different retail firms. Roses and chrysanthemums have played the most important part in filling these orders, and also a great many orchids have been used. Carnations have not at all come up to expectations, as they are of small proportions, but the great scarcity makes the price stiff, and none are retailing under $1 per dozen. Roses are bringing from $1.50 to $6.00 per dozen, the highest prices being obtained for Russells, and Hoosier Beauty. Some excellent Columbia, Ophelia, and Shawyer are coming into this market.

NOTES.

A large number of foliage wreaths were sent out by the A. J. Lanterrier Co. for funerals, on account of the shortage of flowers. This firm has been combining oak foliage with chrysanthemums in funeral sprays, also, on account of the scarcity of greens. They report a continuance of last week's heavy demand in funeral designs.

The Flick Floral Co. is receiving some fine Major Bonnafon chrysanthemums, and Hoosier Beauty and Ophelia roses from their greenhouses. Funeral work has kept the store force working overtime all week.

A handsome window decoration of Chrysolora chrysanthemums and Ophelia roses, arranged in artistic baskets, was staged by Ed Wunninghoff last week. He reports no let-up in the demand for funeral work.

The New Haven Floral Co. is having a fine crop of chrysanthemums with which to meet the heavy demand. Their cut of roses is also large, and of excellent quality.

Boston.

MARKET MEETS RADICAL CHANGE.

The market has undergone quite a change with business rather quiet, although resumption of social functions the latter part of the week helped matters, and the supply cleaned up well. High prices have gone for the present, and stock is back to normal figures.

NOTES.

Thomas F. Galvin, Inc., reports excellent business, although there has been a falling off in funeral orders. The plant and cut flower demand is better than in previous years at this season.

As soon as its lease expires on the premises in Winthrop square, the Waban Rose Co. will move to the Flower Exchange, where they have arranged to occupy 10 stalls.

Wheeler & Co., orchid growers, at Waban, are in full crop with cattleyas and, at present, are making large shipments to New York. The crop at this time numbers 4,000 blooms.

Welch Bros. Co. have had a successful season, but find trade slowing up. They are, however, shipping numerous orders to New York state points, when prices are favorable.

The annual meeting of the Boston Cut Flower Exchange was held October 26 at Young's hotel, and the present officers and directors re-elected.

Dolansky & McDonald are busy with out-of-town shipments. This season they will handle the stock of the Wm. Sim range.

A. Cohen, who bought the Carney estate at Brighton, is marketing excellent heliotrope plants and Boston ferns.

Arnold & Fisher, of Woburn, have very good stock of chrysanthemums in several varieties, also good pompons.

Wm. Owens, of Watertown, is sending in some excellent chrysanthemum plants, which find ready buyers.

S. K. G.

Buffalo.

GENERAL CONDITIONS MORE SATISFACTORY.

Continued good weather has somewhat lessened the death rate and it is now possible for the local trade to take care of their business in a better manner. Stock is also more plentiful, chrysanthemums, roses and carnations showing a decided increase in quantity with quality also improving.

NOTE.

W. J. Palmer, Sr., cast aside usual business October 24 and his hand accustomed to handling roses was transformed into a political handshake. The reason is good things come in bunches. Grandpa Palmer is twice glad. First, Mrs. Mark Palmer told Mark to tell "Grandpa, that W. J. Palmer, 3rd, had arrived," and a few hours later, Mrs. Fowler, nee Mildred Palmer, said, "Tell father we have a little girl at our home." Congratulations to all—especially "Grandpa."

The Florists' Hail Association of America

Was originally incorporated under the laws of New Jersey on June 1, 1887. Since that date it has promptly paid nearly half a million dollars for glass broken by hail.

At the present time it has no liabilities, and, besides its emergency fund, it has a reserve fund of $45,000.

An insurance with the Florists' Hail Association means prompt payment in case of loss.

No More Soot Troubles

Z-I-N-C-O WHAT IT IS

Soot Destroyer is a harmless combination of chemicals. When this powder is spread lightly over a good hot fire the gas fumes resulting turn the soot into a light ash easily carried off by the draft, reaches places never touched by the operation of cleaning. It follows the draft and burns the soot thoroughly, prevents the discharge of large volumes of soot into the atmosphere, to cause complaints and become a criminal nuisance to yours-elf and your neighbors. It is very inexpensive to buy—simple and easy to use. The average cost per week is but a few cents. It is a fine fire saver as boiler surfaces are always exposed to the heating units. A clean boiler steams very easily and is a great labor saver. It does an A-1 job, without any effort on your part. All required is a good fire. It is now burning soot in the largest plants in 41 states. Join these up to-the-minute

"Ain't it a Grand and Glorious Feeling?"

WHAT IT DOES

Z-I-N-C-O

Soot Destroyer will put pep into your boilers—make them deliver. It will keep them young and make old boilers heat like new. It will reduce ash and dirt. It will in rease your draft.

WHAT IT DOES

Z-I-N-C-O

It destroys the worst cases of soot and soot scale, increases the efficiency of your boilers with less fuel, does this work quickly—easily and cheaply. Does all this for a few cents per week—with no extras.

Note The makers of Z-I-N-C-O have agreed to supply us with a number of small packages of this unusual article. The quantity is limited. The price is $3.00. If you have soot troubles, order one at once.

BRISK BUSINESS CONTINUES.

With funeral work pouring in every day, and the florists grinding out designs and clusters, business continues brisk. Chrysanthemums are more plentiful, but prices are high. Golden Glow, Touset, Oconto and Golden Gleam are among the best varieties. Chrysolora is also very good, but the supply as yet is limited. Carnations show much improvement, but the receipts are meagre. Violets are of excellent form, but there is no great call for them so far.

NOTES.

Edwin Kendig, proprietor of the Floral Art Studio, Oswego, N. Y., has bought the Rosery Flower Shop, of which the late Paul Campus was proprietor. He plans to conduct both stores.

We regret to announce the death of Miss Tessie Whitman, formerly employed by H. E. Wilson. She succumbed to pneumonia at Washington, D. C., while studying to be a nurse in that city.

It has been announced that the business of the late Nathan R. Graves, horticultural photographer, will be continued by Mrs. Graves.

CHESTER.

PANA, ILL.—A. N. Nielsen, Inc., have completed their new house, which has been planted with roses in six varieties. The stock is breaking nicely and an excellent cut is expected in for Christmas.

JUST THINK WHAT THEY GIVE

WINTER WINDOW BOXES.

Replace Summer Flowers with Evergreens

The summer window boxes are now all bedraggled and forlorn; they are no longer ornamental, but in their present state give a very untidy and neglected look to the dwelling. It is astonishing how people will tolerate and evade duties of their own, which omission they are quick to notice in others.
Get these unsightly things back to the shop at once with the order to renew them with bright evergreens.

A very good and lucrative business can be worked up by the men who will make a specialty of filling winter window boxes. To those who take a pride in their home, there is no one thing more decorative for the winter season than well-filled boxes of evergreens.
Florists as a rule wait for such orders to come to them. "Mrs. Smith" decides that she will have boxes of evergreens for her front windows. She gives the order, which is filled satisfactorily, resulting in a much improved appearance to the house. Now here is an opportunity for the florist to get busy and work the neighborhood, using "Mrs. Smith's boxes" as an example, showing how much nicer the house looks with the addition of the evergreens.

A good bright salesman, with photos of work of this kind, showing different styles of boxes filled in various combinations of selected evergreens, will hook a lot of orders if he goes about it the right way. On all new work he should look carefully over the ground, study each prospect, measure the spaces to be decorated, and be prepared with several estimates for the more or less elaborate character of the work.
He must be full of enthusiasm for his subject. He is there to talk evergreens, and the great decorative effect of their beautiful, bright or dark-green foliage, which gives such life during the dreary winter months. He carries photos of separate plants, choice specimens, of which the names and characters appear and should be very familiar to him, as he must be or have the air of an expert in his work. Trees in tubs for the stoop or in the vestibule, in fancy jardinières or the more modest green tubs, are sure to meet with favor by some of those who can afford them. As a rule, he talks to people who are not at first interested, but who by his enthusiasm for evergreens and their great beauty in the adornment of the dwelling, are after a time, won over and the sale is made.

While everything in the window box line that has to be manufactured, has advanced in price, they will not be found more difficult to sell than before, as, somehow, inflated money keeps moving along on a level with rising prices. Cement and terra cotta boxes, which conform to the architecture of the building, are, on account of their lasting qualities, to be recommended to those who want the best. Although costing more at first, they are almost indestructible. They are very heavy, and should always have securely fastened iron bracket supports.

The lighter wooden or metal boxes, printed or bark covered, are much used.
These, with care, will last several seasons. Those of cement or terra cotta should be made in sections of from two to three feet in length; they are then much easier handled. When fitted together in place, they appear as one box.

The filling is important. There can be great variety in the arrangement, to look best with the height and width of the various windows. It is important to get the best varieties of evergreens suitable for this work. The most useful, and at the same time moderate in price, are American arbor vita and dwarf Norway spruce. Junipers are also good, as are hemlocks and some of the pines. In the east, retinoparas are much used, they seeming to stand the winter better east of the Alleghenys than they do in the west.

The wide window, six feet or over, should have a tall, slender juniper at each end. The arbor vite or spruce can be carried the same height straight across, or with plants of varying heights, carried high at the ends and low in the center. A low standard box, with a globe-like head raised about a foot above the center, makes a nice finish. A little careful trimming will give a neat symmetrical finish. The arbor vite can also be trimmed square, and when planted a short distance apart, so that each stands out individually, the effect is good.

While in some a close, hedge-like appearance is desired, others have each plant just touching. Another treatment is to trim each of these plants so they do not touch, which spacing makes quite a difference in the style. Another plan is to square the plants up and across the top, each alternate one being on a level a few inches shorter than the others, thus giving a formal design.

Boxes filled with an assortment of varieties, are in their different shades of coloring and form, quite attractive. Such orders have the advantage of using up odds and ends, plants perfectly good, but of which there would not be enough of any one kind to fill an order.

Bushy ivies to hang over the edge make an effective finish to all boxes, but they do not last the winter through, particularly if the dwelling faces the south, the alternate freezing and thawing taking the color out of the leaves. Neglect in watering is another source of damage. Florists who put up such boxes, should see that they are thoroughly soaked at first and warn customers that they should not be allowed to become dry. If they freeze solid when wet, they will remain in good condition, but if allowed to freeze when dry, they cannot take up water and soon present a withered appearance.

A lot of trade can be worked up with stores, hotels and clubs, which are always open to consider anything that will add to their appearance from the street. The stores value the street front and the effectiveness of their window displays as a most valuable asset to their business. Florists should study each proposition and, if possible, furnish a sketch showing the decorative effect to be obtained by the use of cornice and pavement boxes and tubbed evergreens. Many enterprising merchants spend as much on one newspaper advertisement as would pay for a permanent evergreen decoration.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

The tide of events is moving so swiftly these days, changes are so rapid, and extremes so great, that one hardly knows just what to expect. The demand for flowers, on account of the epidemic, gave the business a wonderful boost. It was of course as welcome as it was unexpected. With the passing of the influenza, and the return to normal health conditions, these extra orders were eliminated and the transactions are now only those incident to the season. Unfortunately there appears to be but little, if any, resumption of the debutante or "coming out" teas, which were such a factor at this season, before the war. The trade will have to wait another year for a return of this beautiful custom. While the comparative lull is on, there should be no lack of effort to speed things up by attractive store and window displays. While the florists' stock in trade is the most beautiful and much more wonderful in every way than other classes of shopkeepers have to offer, there is less effort made to bring plants and flowers to the attention of the public than the goods of any other line.

In the throngs that hourly pass the store, going and coming, there is quite a large percentage of flower lovers. To catch as many as possible of these prospective customers, should be in the hands of some one of the store force, who will give it thought, who will work out attractive and seasonable displays, and keep tab on results obtained. The store must present a wide-awake, up-to-date appearance at all times, with short, snappy window cards calling attention to the plants or flowers displayed or their price. This latter is important, as without it, the impression of many may be, "Yes, these things are very beautiful, but I guess they are too high priced for me."

Striking effects are made with just one class of goods or color. For two days use all forms of one size, with a prominent price card. Each should stand with enough space to show its individual beauty. Next try vases of chrysanthemums and autumn foliage. These are seasonable and very effective. Two days later run a sale of tumbler baskets, filled with short roses. These are now very plentiful, and can be given a price that should move them off quickly. Blue vase baskets, with high handles, that will hold from eight to a dozen pink chrysanthemums, tied at the handle with blue ribbon, will be sure to attract attention. These flowers can be sold with or without the baskets, as it is not necessary to cut but a small portion, if any, from the stems. Many florists do not remove the bottom leaves from the stems. This is a mistake: they should be removed at least one-third up as they foul quickly in the water. A drop or two of formaldehyde to a gallon of water will prevent sloughing of the leaves. A window of pompons is worth while, as many will stop and take a bunch home for the table.

Let your customers know what is in the market by frequent post cards. The white card, slightly larger than a postcard, containing quite a lot of printed matter, can be mailed for one cent, and if printed an odd color has quite an up-to-date appearance, and is sure to get a "once over."

Every spare moment should be turned to the preparation of all kinds of Christmas goods, such as magnolia and oak leaf wreaths, to be decorated later for the cemeteries. Red Japanese chenille is still in vogue and a number of wreaths in various sizes should be made up, as they give a Christmasy appearance to the holiday decorations of the store. Plan a good supply of evergreen and boxwood for wreaths, and have them made up ahead. They will keep for a month in a cool dark cellar, if not allowed to dry out.

Keep a table in the front of the store filled with sample fern dish ferns, and a few filled ferneries. Many orders for refilling are obtained in this way.

The first of the stevia is now in. It is a great favorite with many customers. Keep each bunch wrapped separately. Do not break the bunches to sell a few sprays, as what is left too frequently goes to waste.

Back up the bunches of violets with small green galax leaves; they should be kept out of sight beneath the violet leaves, which they keep nicely in place. Violets should never be crowded so closely as to disturb the outline of the bunches.

Care of Plants in Stores.

Paper by Joseph Bennett, Lachine, Que., read at the twenty-first annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association, Ottawa, Ont., August 14, 1918.

I am taking it for granted that plants are always delivered at the stores in good salable condition, and that the pots are clean. Of course, no grower ever delivers plants to the store that are unfit for sale or with dirty pots; at least, I hear that is the rule in Ottawa. It is the fault of the store managers if they allow plants in under any other condition. There is quite a difference in stores, so I will class them as 1, 2 and 3.

1. Those who are fortunate enough to have a good greenhouse attached to the store should not have much trouble in keeping plants in good shape, as they can change from store to house and vice versa as often as they please.

WINTER WINDOW BOXES.

WINTER WINDOW BOXES.

Terra Cotta Receptacle Filled with Boxwood Over First Floor Hotel Cornice.

2. Then there are stores which are located on a street corner and get light from at least two sides. Plants can be kept in fair condition in such a store for a long time, if looked after properly.

3. But it is in what I call No. 3 store, situated between other stores, with only one window at the front, and probably a narrow one, that plants will require very careful handling and attention to keep them in salable condition for any length of time, especially those that are in bloom. Ferns and palms or other foliage plants can, of course, be kept in good shape much easier and longer than flowering plants.

As to the best way of looking after plants in stores, there will most likely be a difference of opinion. I would say the first thing to do is to place some one of the help in charge of the plants, and let that one be responsible, as if left to anyone to look after them there is sure to be neglect. Also, the one selected to look after the plants ought to have some idea of what is necessary to do, as all plants do not require the same treatment, even when they are in a store. In my opinion, the watering of plants in stores is, as a rule, done in a very careless manner. I have seen a boy take a watering can and soak everything as he comes to it, and I have also seen plants dead for want of water. Watering plants in stores needs to be done carefully, more especially in the cold weather. Plants require to be gone over one by one, and do not water any more than necessary. Also use tepid water in winter. Have all this work done the first thing in the morning, so the floor will not be in pools of water. With large or any very good plants always use a vase, but be sure the water is not allowed to remain in the vase. All foliage plants should be cleaned at least once a week, and do not forget to give the pots a rub as well.

To sum up the stores, No. 1, with greenhouse, should not have much trouble to keep plants in good shape. Store No. 2 will have to be careful in watering and attention, but Store No. 3 needs the utmost care and attention all the time, if the plants are to have a chance at all. I am sure that some stores lose a lot of plants which could be kept in salable condition if, as I suggest, someone was responsible for them, but in every case it is up to the proprietor or manager, if he cannot do it himself, to appoint someone else. The few remarks I have made may not be very helpful, but I trust others will have something to say on this matter, so that other views may be brought out and some good result from the discussion.

Finishing Touches.

Every plant or other article that is offered for sale in the store should always be of 100 per cent value. It must look bright and new, as if right out of the box. An insignificant chip somewhere on a piece of pottery, takes away at once 25 per cent of its value. This can in many cases be fixed up with a little cement and paint so as not to be noticeable.

It is astonishing what a little soap and water will do with the glass and pottery. The dust and dirt removed, a rubbing with a dry soft cloth gives them an added lustre and newness that puts them at once to the front. Plants, of course, cannot be rejuvenated in this manner, but just get all the foliage plants about the store on a cement floor or other such place where it will not matter when you play the hose on them. In five minutes they have taken on such a bright, fresh appearance that one can scarcely believe they are the same plants. All foliage plants, palms, ferns, dracanas, etc., should have such a bath at least once a week.

Blooming plants, cyclamens, begonias, primulas, azaleas, heather, etc., should all be made as inviting as possible, with some of the little touches that cost but a few minutes' time and make them all doubly attractive.

Crepe paper pot covers, with a bow of narrow ribbon, or a piece of colored mat used in the same way, give a good color effect. A twig or two of pussy willow, stuck into opposite sides of a pot, bent over as a handle and tied with a knot of ribbon the color of the flowers, gives an added value far greater than the cost.

A rhododendron plant with a naked stem can be made to look quite bushy by the addition of a few laurel branches stuck into the soil of the pot. Polish the leaves of the aspidistra with a cotton flannel rag and add 25 per cent to its value. A pot of heather is much more distinctive with a little bow of plaid ribbon. Foliage plants take on an added value or their appearance is much enhanced when displayed in a suitable jardiniere; the one sells the other and often both go together.

Now that flowers are likely to be plentiful, a bid for regular orders, delivered once or twice a week, should be made. This should not be undertaken without due consideration; just a few would not pay, but if 25 or more regulars can be listed for a $1.00 box twice a week, or only on Saturday, these will be found to be quite profitable. It is well, in these boxes, to keep as far as possible to one or two things at a time and vary with the season—all roses, all carnations, all sweet peas, all narcissi, etc., with stevia while it lasts, short freesias, short sweet peas, etc. All flowers must be strictly fresh; to use up accumulations of a day or two will only cause trouble and dissatisfaction.

PLANT NOTES.

Ferns.

A good stock of small ferns is a necessity at this season of the year to the florist having a retail trade, for the fern dishes will now be coming in to be refilled and this has become quite a feature of the business. While this branch of the trade is in many cases very unsatisfactory, yet it is greatly the fault of the dealer that it is so, and with a little care and method can be made very remunerative and satisfactory to himself and his customers. In the first place a book should be kept giving the date when such customer's dish was filled, and above all things do not endeavor to buoy the customer up with any false hopes as to how long the dish will keep in good condition. In many cases the dish is placed on the center of the table 15 to 20 feet away from any light, the care left to domestics, and it may never be watered from the time it reaches the house until it is returned to be filled, and oftentimes the customers will say it was only a week or two since it was filled, when by reference to the book it will be found to have been two months. When the dish is returned make a note as to what varieties seem to have succeeded the best and use these in refilling. It is wonderful to note the effect on the different varieties in different houses. What will live and thrive in one house will often be the first to die in another. Have a few dishes put up ready for sale. It is often possible to make a sale when the customer sees them all ready, though he might not wait to have one made up or would never think of it unless his attention was drawn to it. Besides the ferns, have a good stock of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri in small pots; these will often grow where ferns will not live at all. And also a fine lot of small palms, cocos and kentias, and small dracaenas for the centers of the fern dishes.

Rambler Roses.

The wood of the several rambler roses that are to be forced should be well ripened up. Those that have been grown in the open ground should be lifted and potted. The pot-grown stock should be subjected to some freezing weather, but they should not be left out until the weather becomes severe enough to freeze the ground so that the pots become broken. A covering of leaves may be placed over the pots if the wood has not been thoroughly ripened, but they are better stored in deep pits or sheds, where the temperature may be kept just above the freezing point. The small twiggy wood should be cut out, leaving the strong canes, and these should be tied to a stake and kept erect. This will greatly reduce the labor when moving them and allow for closer packing when they are packed away and besides prevent the branches from lying on the ground and becoming soft or perhaps causing rot, if too damp. The stock that is lifted and potted should be given a rich rose soil and potted firmly, ramming the soil down hard with a wooden stick. All roses require a firm soil to get the best results. The baby ramblers can be carried into the houses and brought into bloom for Christmas. A temperature of 30 degrees to 65 degrees should produce plants with bloom if started at once.

Gladiolus Colvillei.

The winter blooming gladioli make a valuable addition to the late winter and spring flowers and are very useful as a cut flower or in all kinds of floral work. The blooms are much smaller than the Gladiolus Gandavensis and kindred kinds and can be artistically employed. The varieties grown are The Bride, white; Blushing Bride, white, tinged with pink, and Peach Blossom, light pink. The culture of these is very easy and by a succession of plantings the flowers may be had all through early spring up to June. The bulbs can be procured all at once and kept dry and cool, but do not leave them standing around in the room over the boiler or they will rapidly lose their vitality. They can be planted in deep flats and placed in an out-of-the-way place until they begin to grow, when they should be given a light location in a house with a temperature similar to that in which carnations are grown. The flowers will be larger and have more substance if grown cool, but it will take considerably longer to get them into bloom. Some growers plant these bulbs between the rows of the carnations or the violets, but our experience has been that it is far better to grow them in boxes by themselves, for the carnations will need all the nourishment in the soil if growing well, and if not, they as well as the violets when through blooming had better be cleaned out and some other crop planted and not have a crop mixed in which would delay the planting or occupying of the space. These gladioli will be found very useful and well appreciated by the best trade.

Violets.

The temperature of both night and day have now become settled enough to keep the violet houses in the best growing condition, and the plants should have made a strong, healthy growth, and be producing blooms of good quality. The first sign of disease will sometimes make its appearance as early as the first of November, yet it ordinarily does not show up until later in the year during the dark, dull weather. All leaves which show disease should be picked off at once, and if there should be any great amount making its appearance, run the plant a little dry, and under no circumstances allow moisture to remain on the foliage over night. Water only on bright days and then early in the morning. Give all the air possible during the day, and if the disease continues raise the temperature a little at night and do not open the houses quite as much or as early in the morning. A little warmer temperature will induce a new root action, and if this takes place the plant will begin to make a new growth and the disease will disappear. The disease only makes any great headway while the plants are not growing, for when "the elegant spring," as one grower always used to express it, comes, the plants take on new vigor and the disease is no more. As soon as the plants begin to grow the temperature can be dropped to normal for the culture of these plants, which should be about 40° at night. Be careful in removing the leaves not to disturb the plants any more than necessary. Do not pull them off carelessly, but pinch them off with the thumb and forefinger.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Mrs. Daisy Minder, wife of Jacob Minder, a well-known grower of the Cottage Hill section, died recently of influenza, age 40 years.

MACON, GA.—Dan C. Horgan, of the Idle Hour Nurseries, of this city, reported $461,800 worth of Liberty bonds sold by the committee of which he was chairman, in the recent campaign.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—The meeting and exhibition of the Texas State Florists' Association, which it was previously announced would be held in this city, November 19-21, has been postponed indefinitely.

THE CARNATION.

Planning for the Christmas Cut.

The present time is one of the most critical periods in the life of the plants for the coming season. They are now building up a constitution that is to tell on their production throughout the entire season, and it may be said that as the plants look November 1, so

Care in the watering is one of the most important of these. Until steady firing commences, the soil does not dry out very rapidly, but the plants should not be allowed to suffer in the slightest degree for the want of watering. Strictest care should also be taken to keep the plants free of insects. The best method for doing this is to spray regularly with the insecticide, as a prevention, rather than a cure. As the plants increase in size, the disbudding requires more and more attention.

will they during the winter months. The plants should now be in such a condition, that unless some disaster befalls them, the grower can practically bank on his Christmas crop. The plants have now overcome the dangers and setbacks incident to the planting and assimilation of the soil, and should be well furnished with buds and shoots as an indication of what they will produce in a very short while. Any that do not measure up to these conditions are backward plants and must be encouraged in every way to make growth and get their winter crop in sight before the short, dark days commence.

Higher prices are being obtained at the present time for carnation blooms than have ever been paid at the same season in the history of carnation-growing, yet the prices are no more than should be expected when the increased cost of production and everything else is taken in consideration. But the high prices should not serve as an incentive for the grower to break away from the well-trying-out rules of culture, and attempt any hastening of the crop, because any driving of the plants now may weaken them for the rest of the season, especially so, when the plants are under size. Owing to their experience of last year, a great many of the smaller growers have reduced their plantings of carnations, so that every indication points to a steady demand for the blooms this coming season. It will pay every grower to use common sense judgment and be particular to attend closely to every little detail in the general routine care of the plants. It is a great pleasure to every grower, who takes pride in his work, to get his plants all wired up and started off right, and when he sees them responding with a strong, heavy growth, and lots of buds and good flowers in sight, it is an added delight. After everything has been put into shape, as indicated here, it is much easier to pay close attention to the necessary requirements of the plants.

This work should be attended to closely. If neglected, the development of the flowers is set back. Be sure all the dried up or diseased grass is kept cleaned off the plants; also, do not allow any weeds to get a start in the beds, and above all be most particular to maintain an even, steady temperature, so far as the weather conditions will allow. Carnation plants thrive best in well aired temperature, so give plenty of ventilation on every favorable occasion during the daytime, and at night, enough to maintain a clear, cool, dry atmosphere at 48 to 50 degrees.

TORONTO, ONT.—The store of H. G. Dillemath presents a very attractive appearance, resplendent with its new decorations, and prepared for a busy fall season.

National Publicity for Flowers.

Thoreau is quoted as saying, "Most men lead lives of quiet desperation."

To get the public mind concentrated upon flowers, especially in these troublous times, is hard indeed for an individual to attempt, in fact, nothing but a desperate effort would be rewarded with success. One of the ideas back of our publicity campaign was to make an organized effort to do this very thing, in order that the florists might cut this desperation out of their business lives and enjoy a better demand for plants and flowers, and who shall say our committees have not succeeded?

Through our magazine advertising, many thousands of people have turned their minds to flowers as mediums for the expression of sentiment under various conditions. Every mail brings to this office numbers of letters from all parts of the country requesting copies of our little booklet, "Say it with Flowers," and information in regard to filling orders in distant cities. This result is very gratifying to us, even though representing but a fraction of the interest which is aroused by the publicity our fund provides.

Our slogan has even had expression on the stage. We are informed that recently in a vaudeville performance, during a pause in a dual song and dance act where, according to custom, a little banter passes between the partners, the male of the duet made a stammering protestation of love to the female, whereupon the latter said, "Oh! Cut it out and say it with flowers." This brought a hearty laugh from the audience, which it is quite fair to assume recognized the slogan.

Gradually, but irresistibly, our slogan is taking hold. Any florist who is not giving it a personal push is making a mistake. Our promotion bureau is providing the means for a push through the dealers' aids service. The beautiful glass sign displayed in any store window says "Say it with Flowers" all day long, and every day. If this sign, at two dollars, is considered an extravagance, then there is the decalcomanie sign, supplied in units of four, in sizes for windows and door panels, at one dollar the unit. Our bureau has supplied hundreds of these transfer signs, but ought to place 10 times the number. There are "stickers," in three sizes, suitable for affixing to envelopes, boxes, express packages, and the like, the use of which connects the slogan to an individual establishment. Our lantern slides for use in the moving picture houses are works of art at chromo prices. Our electrolyte service, comprising newspaper plates featuring the magazine advertisements, are extremely effective when used in local newspapers, as tending to connect a local store with the advertisements in the 10 magazines. The slogan is prominent throughout.

All these present a chance for noisy demonstration which will go a long way to obviate the necessity for quiet desperation, and promote that healthful activity which is essential to prosperity.

We are still waiting to hear from a surprisingly large number of florists who have not yet contributed to the fund. Every dollar so far contributed has been applied to the work, and about $5,000 more is required to complete the plans made for the year. This is not a large sum, and surely should be forthcoming.

JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

F. T. D. Service During Shortage.

As the Florists' Telegraph Delivery stands for the best service that it is possible to give its patrons, the immense amount of business in general and the number of orders sent to small towns, during the recent epidemic, many of which could not be filled, as stock was not available, calls attention to the fact that florists must handle such conditions in a more businesslike way. Secretary Albert Pochelon, of the association, says the average retail florist simply sends back the telegram to the member from whom he received the order, saying it could not be filled owing to lack of stock, and that such action does not seem to be the right spirit, as it does not convey the message which the customers wish to send. This same proposition, he adds, holds good when a telegram ordering flowers for a funeral arrives too late, or as often happens, the day following the burial. In many cases, it is not simply a question of how much of a sale can be made. The main thing is that the florist receiving such order, convey to the person to whom the flowers were to have been delivered, the information that friends in a distant city had thought of them in their bereavement, but through a delay in the telegram or owing to a shortage of flowers, it had been impossible to carry out their wishes. Mr. Pochelon says at his establishment in Detroit, Mich., when such exigencies arise, a message explaining the situation is invariably sent or telephoned to the house.

Coal Miner Breaks World Record.

As an answer to President Wilson's recent appeal for more coal, John Mullins, employed at the Solvay Collieries Co., Hemphill, Pa., showed he was 100 per cent true American, and in one month dug and loaded 631 tons of coal, setting a world's record. His wages for the period are said to have been about $450, which must impress some of his less ambitious brethren as quite worth while.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Thomas H. Hall has solved the delivery problem by employing a woman driver for his auto truck.

Employment Ruling of Industries Board.

William F. Gude, Washington representative of the Society of American Florists, calls attention to the subjoined communication from the chief of labor section, priorities division, bearing on the ruling of General Crowder that the draft of September 12 would not close the florist industry, the details of which were given in our issue of September 14, page 389. The communication of the war industries board followed a conference October 28, at which Mr. Gude presented a half-page article which recently appeared in a Denver, Colo., paper to the effect that all persons in the florist industry between the ages of 18 and 56 should either quit their positions or be drafted into military service. The Washington representative stated at the conference that his mission was not to obstruct war industry but to conserve the florists' as well as every other line of business while the war was in progress, and the board's communication which follows is reassuring:

October 30, 1918.

"W. F. Gude, Washington, D. C.

"Subject: Florists' Labor.

"1. You have called our attention to a letter dated October 24 addressed to you from Davis & Whitney, Attorneys at Law, Denver.

"2. This letter states among other things in substance that a United States employment service agent in Denver has stated to men who are working as florists that unless they absolutely quit their jobs before November 1, they will be inducted into the military service immediately; further that this covers every man between the ages of 18 to 56.

"3. If an employment agent made such a statement we think it was unauthorized. The fact that a man is employed in a florists' establishment would not in all probability entitle him to consideration for deferred classification on industrial grounds, but such a man, provided he is not a clerk in a florist's store, is not engaged in a non-productive occupation within the meaning of General Crowder's present "work or fight" order and would not lose his right to deferred classification on dependency grounds or his order number and be inducted into service because he chose to remain in his employment. This is in accordance with the present law and regulations.

"4. You will understand this does not apply to a clerk in a florist's store who comes within the "work or fight" order.

"5. You will agree with us that the florist business is among the less essential businesses. The need for most effectively utilizing the man power of the country in the present emergency demands that so far as possible able bodied men should be either in the service or in some war industry and it is perfectly proper that such men should be encouraged by the employment service or by anyone else to get into a war industry. It is not, however, as we have said, proper to use as a means of compulsion a statement which is not justified.

A. W. CLAPP,
"Chief of Labor Section
"Priorities Division."

Coal Restrictions Lifted.

In confirmation of his telegram, dated October 30, to the effect that florists would be permitted to use coal to the extent of 100 per cent of their average requirements, if they could get it, as announced in last week's issue, page 698, we are in receipt of the following copies of communications from Wm. F. Gude, Washington representative of the Society of American Florists:

"October 26, 1918.

"To All State Fuel Administrators:

"Until further notice, state fuel administrators may permit florists to receive and burn bituminous coal, steam anthracite, or coke breeze without having such fuel apply on their 50 per cent quota, as defined by the fuel administration curtailment order of April 24, 1918, whenever there is a surplus of such fuel, which in the opinion of the state administrator, can be spared for such purpose.

H. A. GARFIELD.

"October 28, 1918.

"W. F. Gude,
"Washington, D. C.

"Confirming our 'phone conversation of this morning I quote you circular issued by Delos W. Cooke, New York state fuel administrator:

"Please disregard all former instructions and be governed by the following: Wherever churches have arranged for curtailment of use of anthracite coal, they are privileged to receive such additional amount of bituminous coal as will meet their requirements. All private greenhouses are privileged to receive bituminous coal in an amount to equal one-half of their normal requirements, but under no condition are they to receive or be allowed to burn anthracite coal.

"UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION, "Bureau of Conservation.

"(Signed) MORRIS W. MONTGOMERY,
"Restricted Industries Section."

Do It Now.

Paul Berkowitz, who is probably better known to the retail craft than any other florists' supply man in the country, says that retailers as a rule are very short sighted and stand in their own light regarding the laying in of supplies. There are certain standard lines which they must carry; in fact, they cannot do business without them. Such goods as cypas leaves, magnolia and oak leaves, crepe flowers, wheat sheaves, all kinds of letters and inscriptions, chiffons, and such Christmas material as moss wreaths, chenille, cape flowers, immortelles, etc., are indispensable.

All this material, and a lot more, is positively necessary to have on hand. Very few men, however, send an order in advance; they wait until the stock is almost exhausted, in fact, often runs out, and then comes a rush telegram for this or that, by first express. An account of staple stock should be made at least once a month, so that articles getting low can be ordered before they run out. All Christmas material, wreaths, chenille, oak and magnolia leaves, etc., should be on hand not later than November 1, so that all spare moments can be utilized to advantage in making up the designs.

There is great economy in buying in quantity lots, rather than in the hand to mouth fashion pursued by so many. The experience of the trade in the transportation troubles of last winter, should certainly prompt them to order well in advance of the time the goods are needed. It takes but a short time to write an order, but to put it off until tomorrow, means that it is likely to be forgotten; the stock runs out, then comes the expensive rush telegram, and, perhaps, a loss of business. Do it now. Get it out of the way, and be ready to take up the next thing that comes along.

OBITUARY.

Morton F. Plant.

Morton F. Plant, a well-known capitalist, yachtman and patron of horticulture, died of pneumonia at his home, 1051 Fifth avenue, New York, on the night of November 4, aged 60 years. He was born at New Haven, Conn., and educated in the Russell Military School of that city. He began his business career in 1868 in the service of the Southern Express Company at Memphis, Tenn. He became connected with the Plant system of railroads and served as vice-president of the system until 1902, when it was merged with the Atlantic Coast line. He had large wealth and was liberal in his bequests. He gave $125,000 for the founding of the Connecticut College for Women at New Haven.

Branford House, his estate near Groton, Conn., is one of the finest in the country. At great expense several old farms were transformed into a masterpiece of landscape architecture. Much of this work was done under the supervision of Thomas W. Head, well-known landscape gardener, who for a number of years superintended the estate. For some time the estate has been noted for its fine exhibits of plants and cut flowers at the exhibitions held in New York and other cities. Mr. Plant had owned a number of yachts and his continued enjoyment of yachting gave him the title of Commodore, by which he was known among the devotees of that sport. He was the owner of the New London Baseball club of the Eastern league and it is said that he maintained it at a loss, simply for the pleasure he got out of it. Mr. Plant had been married twice. His first wife, who was Miss Nellie Capron, of Eastern, died in 1913. In 1914, he married Mrs. May Caldwell Manwaring, who survives him, also a son, Henry Bradley Plant.

Corporal W. W. Wilmore, Jr.

Corporal W. W. Wilmore, Jr., son of the well-known dahlia specialist of Wheatridge, Colo., has been reported killed in action while serving with a machine gun company in the United States forces in France. Before entering the army, he was employed at his father's establishment, and also conducted a flower shop at 412 Seventeenth street, Denver. He left for Camp Funston in April of the present year, was in training only three weeks before being sent overseas, and rapidly advanced to the rank of corporal. His genial disposition and many qualities made him a favorite among a large circle of friends to whom the news of his untimely death will be received with keen sorrow. Just before he died, he said: "This is a big, rough game, and someone has to get hurt." He was 30 years of age and is survived by a widow and two young children.

William H. Hendberg, Jr.

William H. Hendberg, Jr., 17 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hendberg, of 415 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J., died at his home, November 4, of pneumonia. The deceased was the son of one of Hoboken's leading florists. His death is the third in the family within a year, his brother, Raymond, 23 years old, and his grandfather, Maurice Hendberg, 75 years old, having died. Besides the parents, a sister survives the deceased. The funeral was private. Interment was in Fairview Cemetery.

Samuel Perlow.

Samuel Perlow, of the firm of Spiwak & Perlow, plant growers of Elmhurst, N. Y., died in the Hahnemann hospital, New York, October 30, after an illness of five days of pneumonia. He was born in Russia 33 years ago. He came to America 12 years ago, having previously spent five years at the Baron Hirsch School for Jewish boys, in the province of Bessarabia, where he studied and worked in floriculture. After reaching this country he had several situations, also spending some time in Canada. Four years ago, he entered the partnership which existed until his death. He was an exceptionally industrious and steady man, his mind being centered on his business. Being unmarried, he lived with the Spiwaks as one of the family. He is survived by one brother.

Mrs. George A. Kuhl.

It is with deep regret that we record the death of Mrs. George A. Kuhl, of Pekin, Ill., wife of the well known grower of that city, who passed away, October 9. Mrs. Kuhl was a most estimable woman with a large acquaintance, having, in company with her husband, attended many trade meetings, and a host of friends will sympathize with Mr. Kuhl in his deep bereavement.

Illinois Florist Hero at Verdun.

Lieut. Julian L. Douglass, Lincoln, Ill., who before his enlistment was employed by Gullett & Sons, well-known florists of that city, had a big share in the recent fighting done by the Prairie division in the vicinity of the Meuse sector in France, according to an interesting article by Frazier Hunt, special correspondent, in the Chicago Tribune of October 21. With a corporal and one private, as an instance of bravery, he captured three machine gun nests and refused to quit after being blown 30 feet by the explosion of a shell. Lieut. Douglass is one of 28 employees of Gullett & Sons now in the service of the United States. Two other brothers, formerly connected with the Gullett establishment, are also in the army.

Cement Oilproof.

Cement which will not be affected by oil is made by mixing glycerine and litharge to the consistency of a thick paste. This will be found very handy in repairing cracked oil reservoirs or in making an oil-tight joint between two metal plates. The cement should be applied as soon as it is mixed since it hardens very quickly.—Cemetery Beautiful.

An average wage increase of $1 per day has been granted anthracite coal miners by Fuel Administrator Garfield, effective November 1.

GREENHOUSE GLASS (new) has sold recently at $8.80 per box. This notwithstanding the fact that there is a great deal of secondhand material being offered.

THE Senate finance committee has been asked by Chairman Baruch of the war industries board to make tax provisions as lenient as possible as far as they apply to potash and nitrate industries to encourage production.

Florists' Hall Ass'n Prompt As Usual.

Samuel Eichler, who suffered almost a total loss of glass at his range at Ada, O., during a severe hail storm, October 5, has received a prompt settlement of his claim from the Florists' Hall Association, of which Jno. G. Esler, Saddle River, N. J., is secretary.

Peace Bouquets.

At a meeting of the Florists' Club of Washington, D. C., November 5, it was suggested that the trade in the United States originate a "Victory Bouquet" to be worn the day peace is declared, the arrangement to consist of three flowers in the form of a corsage, either tied with the national colors, set in a rosette, or with the American flag placed in the center. The suggestion came from President Z. D. Blackstone, was adopted and carries with it a proposal to insert in each of the four local daily papers on "Peace Day" a full page advertisement exploiting the "Victory Bouquet." The advertisements are also intended for insertion in extra editions that will be issued upon release of official news of the end of the war.

EXAMINING COMMITTEES.

President Wm. W. Vert announces the committees to examine new chrysanthemums for the ensuing year as follows:

Boston, Mass.—William Nicholson, (chairman), James Wheeler, Alex. Montgomery. Ship flowers to chairman, care W. J. Thurston, manager, Boston Flower Exchange, 1 Winthrop square and Otis street, Boston.

New York—Eugene Dailedouze (chairman), Wm. H. Duckham, A. Herrington. Ship flowers to New York Cut Flower Co., 35 Twenty-second street, New York, care of chairman.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A. B. Cartledge (chairman), John Westcott, S. S. Pennock. Ship flowers to A. B. Cartledge, 1514 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Cincinnati, O.—R. Witterstaetter (chairman), James Allen, J. C. Murphy. Ship flowers to chairman, Jabez Elliott Flower Market, care of janitor.

Chicago—N. J. Wiator (chairman), E. A. Kanst, Thomas W. Head. Ship flowers to chairman, 162 North Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Shipments should be made to arrive by 2 p. m. on examination days to receive attention from the committee. Must be prepaid to destination and an entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week they are to be examined, or it may accompany the blooms.

Seedlings and sports are both eligible to be shown before these committees, provided the raiser has given them two years' trial to determine their true character. Special attention is called to the rule that sports, to receive a certificate, must pass at least three of the five committees.

The committees will be in session to examine such exhibits as may be submitted on each Saturday during November, the dates of which will be November 9, 16, 23 and 30.

HEAVY OUT-OF-TOWN DEMAND.

The out-of-town demand is very brisk, and there are no signs of any slackening at this writing. The city trade is somewhat better, but there is much room for improvement and the outlook along this line is more encouraging. Stock is cleaning up fairly well in all lines at good prices, and while there appears to be plenty to go around, there is no great surplus when the stores close at night. Carnations are still scarce and command high figures. Chrysanthemums are in large supply and the same holds true for pompons, which are moving satisfactorily, considering the quantities offered. American Beauty roses are good property, also Mrs. Chas. Russell and Columbia, although fancy stock in the two last items needs considerable pushing to bring the advertised prices. Roses in general are in fair supply, but appear to be going off crop, judging from the daily shipments, which are not nearly as large as they have been the previous three weeks. Lilies are holding their own easily at $12.50 to $15 per 100, with very little stock offered. Orchids are plentiful enough, so that the demand can be taken care of and the shipments include some particularly fine cattleyas, cypripediums and vandas. Violets are more plentiful in both the local home-grown singles and the New York doubles, but are not bringing any too good returns. Calendulas of splendid quality are attracting the attention of the buyers as are pansies, daisies, feverfew and snapdragons. Indoor asters are seen and are realizing good prices, owing to the scarcity of carnations. Ferns are bringing high figures and the indications are that they will not be any lower in price, but will advance steadily owing to the reported scarcity all over the country. Smilax is none too plentiful, but other items in the green line are in fairly good supply again. October was an extra good month with practically all the trade, and from all reports received, the total sales show a surprisingly large increase over the same month of last year, and in some instances, almost equal to the best December some have ever experienced. With the influenza-pneumonia epidemic checked, and all but conquered, this city passed from under practically the last of the restrictions established in the weeks of the quarantine. Because of the rapid abatement of the epidemic, it is believed that the state-wide quarantine will be lifted in the near future.

NOTES.

Delbert S. Musser, president of the Cook County Bolo Club, has been busy as a bee electioneering the past two weeks. A sample ballot indorsing men of character was sent broadcast just previous to the recent election by authority of the board of directors, and it was pleasing to note that Peter Reinberg, who was a candidate for president of the board of county commissioners, was endorsed by this organization. Mr. Musser was in the American army during the war with Spain and the society, of which he is the head, is devoting their efforts chiefly to the welfare of the boys who are at present fighting for the righteous cause.

H. B. Kennicott is again on duty at Kennicott Bros. Co.'s store after a several weeks' business and pleasure trip to Clearwater, Fla. His firm is now featuring extra fancy Bonnafons in quantity.

John Brodbeck, who is at present with the colors at Camp Dodge, Ia., is home on a leave of absence this week. He is a son of Phil Brodbeck, the well-known grower at Evanston.

Erne & Co. are having a brisk call for indoor asters, which they are handling in quantity, in addition to a complete line of all other seasonable stock.

E. H. Blameuser, of Niles Center, is unusually happy this week. It's twins—a boy and a girl.

Paul Klingsporn, manager of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, A. Bensen, of the Lombard Floral Co., and Fred Stielow, of Stielow Bros. Co., visited the growers at Richmond, Ind., November 3, where Hill's novelty rose, Premier, was the center of attraction. Mr. Bensen and Mr. Stielow liked the variety so well after they inspected it growing, that they placed good-sized orders for stock immediately.

Tom Kidwell, son of J. F. Kidwell, who was with the 108th Engineers in France, has been ordered back to this country to take up special training at West Point. He is one of the many men in the trade who is making good, and it is a pleasure to note that the florists are easily holding their own in making the world safe for democracy.

John Ziska, of Joseph Ziska & Sons, is strutting about the store this week as proud of a peacock. One of the customers asked one of the men what "the dickens" John was so cheery about. He answered: "It's a brand new girl."

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are strong on boxwood this season, which is arriving in good-sized quantities at regular periods. The demand for it is good, and a large number of bunches are sold daily.

Kyle & Foerster are pleasing their trade with very choice Milady roses, which they are offering in quantity.

J. Fred Wuestenhoff, of the Zech & Mann force, is rejoicing over the arrival of a baby girl.

Mrs. Frank Bruns gave birth to a baby girl this week. She is a daughter of J. F. Kidwell.

The E. C. Amling Co. had a vase of the new rose, Premier, on exhibition at its store this week, where it attracted much favorable attention and comment. This variety looks like a winner and will be grown on a large scale in this vicinity next season. Stock of this variety may be secured through the E. G. Hill Co., and the Jos. H. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., and the Chas. H. Totty Co., Madison, N. J.

About 25 retail florists met at the Congress hotel, Monday, November 4, when further plans were made for the establishment of a permanent association in this city. This is the second meeting held within the week and it is expected that the association will complete its organization in the near future, when further particulars will be announced.

Peter Reinberg, well-known politician and wholesale florist, was re-elected president of the county board, November 5. Mr. Reinberg and his nine Democratic associates on the ticket took the lead in the early counting of the votes and maintained it without fluctuation all through to the end.

Wietor Bros. are having a brisk demand for chrysanthemums and pompons of fine quality, which they are cutting in quantity. Their new pompon, Liberty and Opheila. This firm's Opheila are showing extra fine color and are some of the best obtainable for a long time.

Zech & Mann are more than satisfied with their November business so far, which is starting off extra fine, both in regard to the local and out-of-town demand. Chrysanthemums are in large supply here, together with all other seasonable stock.

John G. Witt is able to visit the wholesale market again after being on the sick list for over three weeks with blood poisoning. His son, Walter, who is at present at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., is recovering from a severe attack of pneumonia.

At Poehlmann Bros. Co.'s store roses are arriving in splendid quality, especially American Beauty, Mrs. Chas. Russell and Opheila. This firm's Opheila are showing extra fine color and are some of the best obtainable for a long time.

J. A. Budlong is handling a fine supply of roses, particularly Mrs. Chas. Russell and Columbia. Champ Weiland is doing remarkably well at this establishment and is one of the favorites.

When you buy from Kennicott Bros. Co., whether in times of scarcity or in times of overabundance of cut flowers—all the advantages go to you. No other inducements are necessary to solicit your orders.

TAUNTON, MASS.—Victor E. Olson, proprietor of the Bay Street Greenhouses, has returned to business, after a serious illness of several weeks.

AKRON, O.—Hammerschmidt & Clark, who conduct a range at Medina, O., have purchased the retail store of the Gilbo Floral Co., in this city.

ELM GROVE, WEST VA.—M. F. Hoffstetter reports an unusually heavy demand for funeral work, many orders being refused on account of the inability to secure stock. With chrysanthemums and carnations coming in, the situation is much relieved.

For Your Supply of CUT FLOWERS

 Remember when ordering that our line is so complete that it includes every item offered in the Great Chicago Market.

Milwaukee, Wis.

DEMAND CONTINUES SATISFACTORY.

Business during the past week was good. While the demand locally was not quite as brisk, the shipping orders came along lively, taking any and everything which could be spared. It turned dark and cool after Wednesday, thus reducing the receipts in roses considerably. More carnations, in spite of the many chrysanthemums, both large and bunch, which are coming in daily, could be moved at good prices. Conditions regarding the influenza are progressing so satisfactorily that the ban which was on for three full weeks was lifted, November 4. We now have reasons to expect more sales for other occasions than funerals and the sick.

NOTES.

The ideal weather conditions of the month of October were brought to a finish with the last day of that month. This was followed by a sharp frost, which finished everything that had been spared previously.

C. C. Pollworth went to Boygan Lake, upstate, a few days last week in order, first, to get rested up after the October rush and, secondly, to get a shot at some ducks.

Visitors: Mr. Hoehl, representing S. S. Skidelsky & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; Richard Haentze, Fond du Lac, Wis. H. V. Hunkel spent a few days the beginning of this month calling on the trade at St. Paul and vicinity.

Gust Rusch & Co. say the rose crop of the Cudahy Floral Co. is not near as heavy as a fortnight ago. E. O.

Columbus, O.

HEAVY FUNERAL DEMAND CONTINUES.

Though the crest of the influenza epidemic has been passed here, funeral work is still heavy, to the exclusion almost of other demands, as social requirements are light. There is an abundance of cut flowers. Chrysanthemums and pompons are in their prime, and bring from $3 to $5 a dozen. Near the point of over-supply, roses have been cut in price on an average of 50 cents a dozen. Carnations are choice stock and cuts are now so free as to make it doubtful whether the $1.50 price can be held, which is almost double that of a year ago. Violets are now a feature of florists' displays, as are also sweet peas of the Christmas Pink variety. In pot plants, cyclamens and solanums have the field pretty much to themselves. There is some anxiety over the outlook for holiday flowers. Varieties of chrysanthemums which are ordinarily cut about Thanksgiving are already matured, and there is doubt about the latter crop being ready in time. Paper White narcissus will be wholly lacking for that occasion, and probably also for Christmas, the bulbs, which should have been received in June, not having yet arrived, and the only satisfaction to be obtained is that they are on the way. In the absence of azaleas, greater dependence will be placed on poinsettias and primroses, both of which promise to be plentiful. A scarcity of fern leaves has developed within the past week, supposed to be due to slow transportation. Florists are being worked hard. A part of their troubles is hurry-up funeral orders from out-of-town, and in these days of irregular express service the care of such trade is very exacting.

NOTES.

Local florists are much gratified over the favorable turn in the fuel situation, which seems to promise necessary supply the coming winter. Those who were preparing to curtail growing, are now reconsidering their plans in this line. With the rush of social demand, which is expected to come as soon as the epidemic bans are lifted, a fine season is anticipated by the retail trade.

During the epidemic, stated meetings of the florists' association are not being held regularly, owing to the necessity of members working over hours to make up for help shortage.

Ormand Grice, grower for the Fairview Floral Company, has been confined to his home by illness. J.

Wichita, Kan.

PRICES STILL ABOVE NORMAL.

Business still continues brisk, with funeral flowers leading the demand. Prices are still above normal, but are gradually easing down somewhat. The supply is catching up a little as the local crops of chrysanthemums come in to the market more plentifully. The weather is still mild and but little inroad so far has been made on the coal piles.

NOTES.

Charles P. Mueller has received his check from the Florists' Hall Association covering his claim for damage in the recent hailstorm. He says it will barely cover cost of glass, not allowing for labor in cleaning up or relaying. Miss Mathie Barley, the capable manager of store No. 2 for Mr. Mueller, after a two weeks' siege with the "flu," came back too soon to the store and after a day or two was obliged to give up and go home until more fit for the work.

Alex Marquardt, for several years foreman at Charles P. Mueller's greenhouses, has resigned and gone to San Francisco to live. He had proven himself a capable man, well liked and will be missed by his associates and friends in the trade.

Ferdinand Kuechenmeister has just received a letter from his sons, Emil and Walter, who are at the front in France. They have been in the thick of it, but so far are safe and sound.

Ralph Culp is back in his old place at the store with W. H. Culp & Co., having temporarily passed up the automobile business until production is resumed.

Clifford Pruner, representing Poehlmann Bros. Co., was a recent and welcome visitor. C.

DEMAND EASIER BUT STILL HEAVY.

The epidemic of influenza, while showing some abatement, is still making sad inroads into the life of the city, and florists have all they can do to satisfy the heavy demand made upon them for funeral work. Flowers, however, are now sufficiently plentiful to make the work easier, and the prices, too, have fallen some and are meeting the popular idea of the value of flowers. Chrysanthemums now hold a conspicuous place in nearly every case where a considerable floral display is made, and yet the increasing supply of roses finds a ready sale. Calendulas, of which a good supply is now available, are daily improving in quality, but move rather slowly on the tables of the wholesale houses. Violets are becoming a factor and their improved quality is most marked. Carnations continue to be in short supply, but the quality is fast improving and local growers promise a big supply when the chrysanthemum crop is on the wane.

NOTES.

A visit to the establishment of A. J. Stahelin, Redford, Mich., reveals a well kept and prosperous place. The two large iron houses devoted to roses are seen in the finest condition. The varieties are Columbia, Mrs. Aaron Ward, White Killarney, Ophelia and Hoosier Beauty. The carnations, now flourishing in his movable houses, are in fine form and indicate at this date a heavy crop for December. Immense quantities of stevia and calendulas are grown here and callas, poinsettias and two small houses of adiantum complete the list of specialties the place is devoted to.

Thomas Browne, Greenfield, Mich., is now bringing in immense quantities of chrysanthemums and they embrace the best commercial varieties. His Chrysolora were exceptionally fine and the Turners now being cut are wonders for size and finish and bring a correspondingly fine price at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, where his whole stock is distributed. Later his Eatons and Maud Deans will easily hold up his reputation as a chrysanthemum grower of rare ability. The blaze of beauty now seen at this place is attracting large parties of visitors.

The veteran, E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., whom everyone in the trade knows and loves, was a visitor last week. Philip Breitmeyer entertained him with Thos. Browne, A. J. Stahelin, Robt. Rahaley and J. F. Sullivan at the Detroit Athletic Club. Mr. Hill is most optimistic as to the future of the florist business as the war now seems to be approaching the end. His new rose, "Premier," is being grown in great quantities to meet the demand for this sterling novelty that deserves its great popularity.

Peter F. Reuss & Co. is now the name over the door at 56 Broadway, where the late B. Schroeter so long conducted the business. Mr. Reuss was employed at this place for the past 20 years and his popularity with the former customers of the store will assure him a continuance of the splendid trade enjoyed by his predecessor. He also has the best wishes of the local florists in his new business venture that seems so full of promise.

SUPPLY CLEANS UP WELL.

The market was steady all last week. Large cuts of chrysanthemums came in daily, but cleaned up nicely at good prices. The past week also saw the last of the dahlias, this section being visited by the first killing frost this fall. Carnations show only a slight improvement. Roses are in good supply and the quality is excellent. Prices are a little above normal. Violets still need a little cool weather to make them right. Sweet peas are seen, but very few of them, and they cut no figure in the market. Snapdragons are beginning to show and have a good call. Lilies and lily of the valley continue scarce. The greens conditions are somewhat easier. The past week saw a little letup in the rush of funeral work. Normal business is more or less at a standstill on account of the prevalent epidemic.

NOTES.

A tour of a number of the chrysanthemum growers shows the heavy cuts of the past few weeks have made big inroads into the chrysanthemum beds. From the present outlook it seems that there will be very few for Thanksgiving in this vicinity. Pompon varieties perhaps will be the only exception to this rule.

Andy Hoffman, of Geo. Waldbart's, has been one of the regulars lately at the wholesale market. Andy tells us that they cut an immense lot of dahlias this year.

The next florists' club meeting is scheduled to be held at the Wm. C. Smith wholesale house, 1316 Pine street, November 14.

The local publicity committee intends to inaugurate an intensive campaign for fall and winter. Now is the time to get busy.

Wm. C. Smith has been home, confined to his bed for a few days with a bad cold. Hold her, Bill. Keep away from the "Flu."

BUSINESS ASSUMES NORMAL TONE.

Business greatly improved during the past week, all branches of the trade getting back into normal stride. Crops are large and growers are receiving good returns. Chrysanthemums are very plentiful with good assortments arriving every day. Prices are moderate. Roses are plentiful and reasonable. Carnations are good, the best bringing $4 per 100. Sweet peas are now coming in and are offered at $2 per 100. Calla lilies are quite plentiful. Pansies, cosmos, bouvardia and similar stocks find a ready sale.

NOTES.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society will hold its annual meeting and election of officers in Horticultural hall, at noon, November 16. The society is making a strong effort to strengthen its membership and an urgent appeal is being made to each member to secure at least one new candidate within the next few weeks. The organization has done splendid work this year in the way of various forms of war relief. It has given the use of its building freely and contributed receipts of its various exhibitions to worthy causes. The membership at present numbers nearly 1,000.

Anold & Fisher have their range at Woburn in excellent condition. Noteworthy among their crops are Bonaffon, Richmond, Pink and White Chieftains, Tint of Gold and a number of pompon and single chrysanthemums. Two houses of carnations are in fine form among the varieties being Benora, Matchless, Pink Delight, Laddie, Beacon and Red Cross, one of Peter Fisher's seedlings.

The annual meeting and election of the co-operative flower market was held October 26, the following being chosen directors for the ensuing year: John MacFarland, Wm. H. Elliott, Robert Montgomery, Donald Carmichael, Elijah Cartwright, Morris F. Comley, James W. Simpson, Walter R. Holden and J. M. Cohen.

George Noyes, salesman for the flower exchange, is a candidate for director and is receiving excellent support. Young blood and a clean market is his platform.

At Welch Bros Co. business is reported very good. Excellent stock in chrysanthemums, roses, carnations, and sweet peas are seen at this establishment.

Dolansky & McDonald have had a very successful season. In addition to their specialty, orchids, they have good violets, roses and chrysanthemums.

At the store of Penn, The Florist, everything is attractively arranged. The cases are kept well stocked while the windows are showy with orange trees.

The Waban Rose Conservatories are cutting heavily on Hadley, Russell and Killarney as well as several varieties of specimen chrysanthemums.

Charles E. Evans, the plumosus specialist, had a very successful season with early chrysanthemums. He is now cutting Bonaffon.

William Nicholson, of Framingham, is cutting excellent Bonaffons and carnations. They clean up readily at good figures.

Edward Bingham has finished his cut of early chrysanthemums and will now devote his time to violets and primroses.

B. A. Snyder & Co. are enjoying a rapidly increasing trade, shipping orders being much heavier than last season.

Newman & Son, at their store on Tremont street, are having excellent business, especially in funeral work.

J. W. Simpson of Woburn, is cutting good carnations and chrysanthemums.

S. K. G.

LIBERAL SUPPLY WEAKENS PRICES.

Since chrysanthemums are being received in larger quantities and the cuts of roses have increased, there are plenty of flowers to meet all requirements. General conditions have changed materially and prices have dropped. Long stemmed roses, which formerly brought $15 per 100, are now offered for $6. American Beauties are also more reasonable, being replaced by the chrysanthemums. Pompons in all colors are now available and help out considerably, being used in place of carnations, which are still scarce. Several shipments of dahlias reached the market this week, but the quality is poor, showing the effect of the frosts. Owing to the numbers of other flowers offered they had to be moved at low prices. Many failed to find sales. There are just enough lilies coming in to supply the call and keep the price up. The demand for greens has been exceptionally heavy, especially in ferns and galax. Plumosus and Sprengeri have also been much sought.

M.

RAVINIA, ILL.—Herman Dreiske is dismantling his range and will retire from the growing business for the present.

DENVER, COLO.—A fire, thought to have been of incendiary origin, recently caused a loss of $1,500 at the range of M. H. Erickson, 140 Cook street. There was no insurance.

RUPERT, IND.—The Rupert Floral Co., under the management of H. C. Bateham, has opened its new greenhouse, 904 Fourth street. The establishment is well stocked with a choice selection of house plants, vines and ferns.

THE LEO NIESSEN CO., 1201 Race St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Philadelphia.

PRICES CONTINUE TO WEAKEN.

There has been a further reaction and retrograding of prices over those of a week ago, brought about partly by a falling off in the demand, but mainly due to the abnormally warm weather the first three days of the week, which doubled the supply. Most of the rose stock was too open to ship, some wholesalers declining out-of-town orders on this account. Chrysanthemums were also in full supply, under which condition the prices held up wonderfully. Carnations are fast getting into marketable condition; flowers are of good size and body, each week showing a gain in length of stems. They are, however, from 25 to 50 per cent lower in price. The dahlias hang on, and as late as November 2 some really good stock was being offered. They are, however, no longer a factor. There is an abundance of sweet peas, some of very good quality. Easter lily growers are holding off a bit, but there appears to be plenty for the demand. Callas are in the first bringing 20 cents. Very good in the calendulas are in a place, but pompon chrysanthemums beat them out. Cattleyas are in excess of the demand, as are oncidiums, both offered at lower prices than a week ago. Mignonette and double violets were added to the list this week. Cold frame candy-tuft of splendid quality is seen, which will be in demand after a few days of cold weather. The chrysanthemums now dominate the market and there is a good supply. Superb Mrs. Turner, almost exhibition flowers, sell as high as 50 cents each. The white and pink Chieftains are favorites, as is also Chas. Razer. Bonaffon is in, and there are very fine Chrysolora. Pompons, in great variety, from singles to the disbudbed single-stemmed flowers are offered in quantity. The open weather, with scarcely any killing frosts, has brought in a lot of the garden varieties. The first in the market sold well, but last week's was very junky and would hardly pay freight. Pot chrysanthemums are now nicely flowered and give a good decorative effect to most of the stores. They meet with a fair demand.

November 4.—The market opened with a considerable shortage of roses, a drop of at least 60 per cent over the corresponding day last week. Prices were not affected to any degree, as the demand was light. There was a good supply of chrysanthemums, which also held their own in price. There were good shipments of carnations and smaller stock, which met with a fair demand.

CLUB MEETING.

The regular meeting of the florists' club, held November 5, was quite well attended. Mark Mills declined to serve as president and the chair was occupied by Vice-President E. A. Harvey. There was a display of seedling roses by Robert Scott & Son, four of the varieties appearing very promising, and Clarence U. Liggit staged a splendid vase of the new rose, Premier, for the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., splendid large blooms. The feature of the evening was the address of Robert Craig, in which he compared the troubles of the present day with his recollections of the old times, together with his prophecy for the future. He was in his best vein and was loudly applauded at the close of his interesting talk.

WITH THE WHOLESALEERS.

Edward Reid, who had to manage during the rush season short one of his best hands, got through in good shape and found time to take a run up to Frank Ross' farm in Montgomery Co. and shoot a few cotton tails to throw into the back of his car. High grade chrysanthemums and a good supply of roses are features of his stock.

Harry Gould, the orchid specialist, is The Leo NiesSEN Co. found last week's business slow in opening, but to close up better, the result being very fair for the season. Bouvardia Humboldtii is a novelty, certainly a choice flower. Cattleyas and oncidiums in quantity were also features of the stock.

NOTES.

The "millstone" that hangs around the neck of the flower business, and is such a load to carry at all times of over supply, is junk. Growers will persist in sending to market stock so worthless that only once in a while it gets across, and returns money enough to pay the freight. To be sure, at times, of extreme depression, when there seems to be little or no demand for anything, even the better grades of flowers have to be sacrificed, and the real junk then becomes more of a detriment than ever. It takes but a little rough treatment of good flowers to put them in the junk class. First packing immediately after cutting, when they should have been "soaked" several hours in water, is a fatal start. Crowding too many together, or packing too loosely makes bruises that can be seen at first glance and condemns the shipment at once. Mauling over after they are offered for sale, quickly puts them in a lower class. Stock that is nicely bunched, packs and carries better, presents an inviting appearance, and if wrapped with a sheet of paper, top and bottom open, is handled without bruising. Each separate flower does not have to be counted, and from every angle, this precaution makes for greater efficiency. If the various commission men could arrange to have a meeting in their stores once a month with their growers and discuss the essential details of the business, it would help matters wonderfully. The world moves, last year, may be a back number 12 months later. The grower who takes a run to town occasionally and looks over the market, gets a line on what his competitor is doing, sees how his own stock sizes up with the others, picks up ideas that should count big in his future returns.

That there is to be no fall or chrysanthemum show in this city is greatly to be deplored. It is the first skip of this important flower function, as far back as memory carries us. We have not time to look up the record, which might disclose it to be, perhaps, the first break. D—the Kaiser. There will be the usual display in horticultural hall, Fairmount park, which Manager Schmitt promises will be up to that of previous years.

Society will be held November 19. There will also be a small exhibit of cut chrysanthemums and a display of vegetables. The lecture, illustrated with lantern slides, is to be given by Prof. Bechtel, of State College, whose subject will be "Storage of Vegetables," which is certainly timely at this season.

The Robert Craig Co. is experiencing a very busy November, having made arrangements to ship most of their out-of-town December or holiday orders during this month, before the express companies become tied up with Christmas business. There is a good demand from all branches of the trade.

We are glad to make a final favorable report of the ailing members of the craft. Charles H. Grakelow is about again, as is John Welsh Young, James Heacock, Clarence Watson, M. J. Callahan and Robert Bragg.

Joseph G. Neidinger, we are sorry to report, is in the hospital to undergo an operation for ulcers of the stomach.

GREATLY INCREASED SUPPLY; PRICES DROP.

* * * Tam saw an unco sight!
Warlocks and witches in a dance;
Nae cotillion bled new frae France,
But hornpipes, jigs, strathspeys and reels
Put life and mettle in their heels.
—Burns.

Supposing that there are witches, and further supposing that on Hallowe'en and other occasions they indulge in such hilarity as above described, to the great confusion of Tam O'Shanter and his mare, Meg, they had splendid weather for their entertainment of the latest date. It was so fine that they would be more likely to dance than to ride on broomsticks. Up to Hallowe'en, the weather was unseasonably warm, and it brought in more stock than could be disposed of, consequently, by the middle of the week the market was in a very sluggish condition. Prices on roses, chrysanthemums and carnations dropped heavily. November 2, roses, for which there had been a heavy demand for funeral work, fell from $5 and $6 per 100 to $3, the better grades of roses, and carnations following in about the same proportion. As for chrysanthemums, they came near being in a glut, nearly every wholesale dealer being full of them, yellow pompons being conspicuous. The weather turned cool, November 1, which, if continued, will somewhat check the arrivals, but prices are likely to remain at a lower level throughout November. There is yet a strong demand for funeral stock, but with a great supply pouring in, prices cannot be raised. A feature that is not encouraging is the light demand for orchids and violets. There is good stock of cattleyas, but a wholesaler remarked, November 2, that in proportion, they were "about the cheapest things on the market." Violets are in a much larger supply than the trade calls for, and as most of the former street men have either gone to war or to other jobs, the violet trade is gloomy.

November 4.—There is considerable business this morning, but the market is full of stock and much of it is selling for less than one-half the prices paid for similar stock two weeks ago. That statement covers the bulk of the rose, chrysanthemum and carnation supply. Lilies range from 10 to 15 cents per flower, wholesale, but it is only the very best that brings 15 cents. Orchids and violets continue plentiful and cheap, the violet market, in particular, seeming to be dead. There is usually some demand for cattleyas, but quantities of them are now being offered at 25 to 35 cents per flower, wholesale. Pompons have reached the stage of being a nuisance, particularly the dark colored ones, and many of them are being thrown away. The supply of American Beauty roses is lighter and the best specials wholesale at the rate of $40 per 100. There is a noticeable falling off in the demand for flowers for funeral work.

NOTES.

In the passing away of Mrs. Russell Sage, who died on the morning of November 4, aged 90 years, this city has lost a true benefactress. Inheriting a fortune of $75,000,000 on the death of her husband, she showed great good sense in the use of it. In addition to many other institutions, she had continued interest in the female seminary at Troy N. Y., from which, as a young girl, she was graduated. In an address to the students on its fiftieth anniversary, she said: "I commend to you, from my experience in life, the cultivation of manners and sound common sense. Character is a perfectly educated will." Some years ago, at an expense of $60,000, she had the border of the West Drive in Central park planted with rhododendrons. Although she distributed millions for charity and benevolence, many of her gifts were never made public.

In the matter of Alexander McConnell, who was adjudged bankrupt September 3, as previously announced in these columns, he has petitioned that having surrendered all his property and rights of property, he be discharged from all debts under the bankruptcy act other than such as are excepted by law. The court has ordered a hearing on same before the United States Circuit Court in the United States Court House and Post Office building, this city, December 2, at 10:30 a. m., at which time creditors may appear and show cause, if any, why the petition should not be granted.

Louis Schmutz has recently filled two houses with fine California palms that he purchased from McHutchison & Co. Since the death of Louis Schmutz, Jr., another brother has been assisting the father in the business.

Dailedouze Brothers, of Flatbush, have their chrysanthemums nearly all cut and will follow up with sweet peas. They have a large stock of Columbia, Ophelia, Scott Key and other roses that are looking fine.

Walter T. Lee, only son of W. S. Lee, who was formerly in the florist business in this city, but for some time past has been engaged in other lines in Philadelphia, is reported to be seriously ill.

Although the dahlias are pretty well cut out, A. H. Langjahr, in the Cut Flower Exchange, is yet receiving good shipments from the Peacock Dahlia Farms, Williamstown Junction, N. J.

Joseph A. Millang, in the rooms of the New York Cut Flower Co., is receiving fine American Beauties from the Pierson ranges, Scarborough and Briarcliffe, N. Y.

Dispatches from London state that the "Allies have closed in on Ghent. We hope, that when they get time, they will let us know how the azalea crops look.

Charles Beckman, Jr., of Elmhurst, who sells his father's stock in the Cut Flower Exchange, has been ill for several weeks, but is now much improved.

Walter F. Sheridan, 133 West 28th street, is receiving good stock of the Russell, Stanley, Ophelia and other roses and chrysanthemums.

Callas Brothers, who have a fine store on Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn, advise us that they have had a great rush of funeral work.

At the range of Spiwak & Perlow, Elmhurst, we have recently noticed fine stocks of ferns, poinsettias, peppers and other plants.

P. F. McKenney, who was confined to his home for a week by influenza, has completely recovered and returned to business.

Pappas Brothers, 2216 Broadway, report that fall trade has been good.

Sarnos Brothers, 2138 Eighth avenue, report large funeral orders.

"Making a Profit."

Paper by Paul Richter, of Henry F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

These three words on a sign stand out very conspicuously on the wall in the office of the head of a large department store in Philadelphia. The sentence is short, but it means so much! Yes, more than most of us in business stop to realize.

Many florists today are basing their selling-prices of cut flowers, plants, and for services rendered, on old-time costs. Conditions have changed, labor has advanced, hours have been shortened, delivery service by automobile in many cases has been forced upon you, —everything that enters into the conduct of your business, (including everything you buy to sell again, such as seeds, bulbs, pots, supplies, etc.) costs very much more. Look at the price of coal! Wax paper costs now just double what it did 12 months ago. Cotton twine in three years has increased about five times its former value. In fact, we could go on in an endless citation of things like this.

Have you increased your selling-prices for plants, cut flowers, funeral designs, and labor performed for your customers? If not, why not? Every florist knows the cost of everything he buys; he should also know the cost (and he can easily figure it) of everything he grows himself, and the cost of any labor he performs, and add a fair profit for his services. The public does not want to be squeezed, but it is willing to pay a fair price for anything it wants. In every line (except the horticultural industry) unheard-of prosperity is being enjoyed, and that same prosperity is right at hand for the florist.

One of our representatives was recently in the retail store of a florist, when a prospective customer came in and asked the price of funeral designs, whereupon he was informed that they ranged from $2.50 up to $5.00 (and it was in a town that is doing an enormous volume of war work). The prospective customer walked out without leaving an order. And why? The price quoted appealed to the buyer as too low. He wanted something better than what was offered, and he was willing to pay for it, which he did elsewhere later in the same town. Imagine the folly of quoting such a price! And cut flowers at the premium they have been for several weeks. The florist did not stop to think that tin foil costs double, wire costs about three times, twine costs five times and paper costs twice its normal value.

Some florists are still selling geraniums in a four-inch pot (and the flower pot goes with it) for 10 cents. They think they cannot get more than 12 cents or 15 cents for an Easter lily flower or a hyacinth. It costs you more than that to grow these items, so do not figure that you have made a profit. You have actually lost money, and the quicker you realize it, the better.

Mr. Florist, this little reminder has been written in your interests. If you want to make a profit, be able to pay your bills when due, make a living, and be able to lay something aside for a rainy day, which is your just due, charge fair prices, make a profit. Start today—now!

The Future.

Did you ever stop to think that only five men in a hundred make a financial success in this life and carry it through to the end? Only four and three-tenths per cent leave an estate of from $500 to $1,000 when they die. Only one and five-tenths per cent leave more than $25,000, and only one and eight-tenths per cent leave an estate of from $5,000 to $10,000. In other words, 97 men out of every 100 fail to leave an estate of more than $1,000 at their death. Many amass fortunes, but lose them. Ninety-five per cent of the men above 65 years of age are dependent. These figures are startling—but, as they are those furnished by the best statistics in the United States, they must be true.

This goal of independence, this haven of rest, which when reached promises so much ease and comfort, is by the above figures proven to be a "will of the wisp", almost impossible of attainment. Most men fail, because they do not keep books, that is accurate accounts, that show them how much it costs to do business, books that will balance at the end of the year, indicating a profit or loss. It is the little and continuous leaks that ruin, and the small but sure gains that make for success. Twenty-five cents a day or $1.50 per week, deposited in a savings bank, will amount to over $2500 in 25 years. This amount weekly is so comparatively trifling to men in business that but few bother to cast this savings anchor to the windward. Yet what a boon it would be to the dependent

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Boligiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendell, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held June, 1919.

CLEVELAND, O.—Walter C. Cook is in the hospital here with pneumonia.

Mrs. J. C. VAUGHAN, Chicago, and one of her grandsons, left for Miami, Fla., November 5.

THE Western Seedsmen's Association meeting date is November 9, at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, Mo.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—John Bodger & Sons Co. has issued a three-page contract list of seeds and prices for 1919 crops.

SASSENHEIM, HOLLAND.—The firm of Rijnsburger & Bros. having been adjudged bankrupt, will be unable to fill orders.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. Schaeffer, representing the John A. Salzer Seed Co., LaCrosse, Wis., investigating the import bulb outlook.

WHILE it is reported that garden seed crops are better than last year, Norwegian growers will likely have to draw on America for a supply.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—John R. Johansen, of the Bertrand Johansen Seed Co., of this city, died October 28, of pneumonia, age 27 years.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade November 6 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.50 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A. Kruhm, formerly with the Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., and the W. Atlee Burpee Co., Philadelphia, Pa., is now with Beckett's Seed Store, this city, in the capacity of secretary.

ORANGE, CONN.—Watson S. Woodruff, of S. D. Woodruff & Sons, was elected state senator, November 5, every town except one in the fourteenth senatorial district giving him a majority, resulting in an unusually large total.

THE executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association has been called by President F. W. Boligiano to meet at the Hotel Bristol, New York, November 15. The annual meeting of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League will be held at the Hardware Club, the day previous, November 14.

NEW YORK.—In the matter of the petition by creditors to have the bankruptcy proceedings of the Arthur T. Boddington Co., dismissed, mention of which was made in our issue of October 19, page 640, a hearing will be held on the motion, November 11 at 10:30 o'clock a. m., before the court for the southern district, Federal building, this city.

SANTA ANA, CALIF.—The Haven Seed Co. has built a new warehouse three stories in height with a total of about 13,000 feet of floor space, designed especially for the storing, cleaning and shipping of tomato seed. In addition to its present holding of 500 acres, the firm has leased about 500 acres additional of exceptionally fertile land favorably situated for this crop.

Philadelphia Seed Trade.

Henry A. Dreer, Inc., who closed their store October 28, are still hard at work getting out orders for bulbs, the arrival of the stock almost two months late necessitating this drastic measure, in order to make deliveries before frost closed the ground. Despite the locked doors, the telephone worked overtime on various subjects. One inquirer took up valuable time to find out why her solanum dropped its leaves. The bulbs are in good condition; but the supply in some varieties is short. Lillium candidum is very scarce, the receipts being only about one-tenth of the quantity ordered.

The H. F. Michell Co. has all hands working at full speed getting out bulb orders, although most of the bulk lots were shipped direct from the wharf in New York. There will be no surplus, as notwithstanding the fact that prices are much higher than last year, in some instances orders are being increased.

S. S. Skidelsky & Co. missed a large bulb shipment as the grower in France would not take the responsibility of seeing the stock aboard ship, claiming same to be at purchaser's risk immediately after leaving his hands.

It is believed there will be no surplus of Paper Whites, as there is a strong and continuous demand even at the high figures. Cold storage giganteum are selling well. There are none in sight from Japan in spite of all appeals to the shipping board.

French Bulbs Delay Causes.

In a communication dated September 25, A. & L. Bremond Freres, Ollioules, France, tell of the causes for the late arrival in the United States of bulbs from that country, due principally to the lack of steamers, from July 22 until September 21. One sailing, which was too early in the season, brought not more than 500 cases, but it was announced that other vessels would leave August 10 and August 24. Every available means of transportation was resorted to to make delivery at Marseilles, even sailing boats and towed barges being chartered from a small harbor three miles from Ollioules, but as their sailing was too uncertain, the firm moved part of its shipments by motor trucks at high expense, due to the scarcity of gasoline. In the meantime it was learned that the sailing of August 10 had been withdrawn, and the boat scheduled for August 24, caught fire while bound from New York with a cargo of benzol and would be disabled for several months.

Several appeals were made to the Chamber of Commerce, calling attention to the fact that between 15,000 and 20,000 cases of bulbs for which cash had been paid to growers and which were perishable were under shed at Marseilles, asking that if a boat were not available, permission be asked to use an American ship returning in ballast and this matter was taken up with Major Cushing in charge of the American base. The situation was also submitted to the Federation of Horticulturists and a representative of the firm went to Paris. It was not until September 20, however, that authority was issued to load the bulbs on the S. S. Cental, the shipments being landed in this country in October.

Seed Culture in Norway.

Of late years great difficulties have been encountered in getting seed from abroad, according to Commerce Reports, and as the district of Sorlandet has proved especially well adapted to seed culture, the first Norwegian seed-culture union has just been formed, the main object of which is seed cultivation, so that Norway in the future will be able to supply its own needs in this line.

Burlap Bag Prices Established.

Bag manufacturers have established maximum prices on bags, f. o. b. factory on the following basis: Maximum prices on burlap, plus cost of manufacturing, plus five per cent margin. The war industries board will make further announcements on burlap about February 1, 1919.

GRAND RAPIDS FORCING TOMATO

The Only Tomato Known That Is Absolutely Self-Fertilizing

Originated in Grand Rapids, where it has been grown very successfully for the past three or four years.

Introduced by Jones Seed Company

ENDORSED BY EUGENE DAVIS

Mr. Davis says the Grand Rapids Forcing Tomato is the most profitable forcing tomato he has ever known. He also says that it is far superior as to its shipping qualities; that it is disease resisting, absolutely self-fertilizing and by far the best tomato to grow under glass.

Fruit round and smooth. Very solid and of good medium size. Color brilliant red and very attractive. Plants of vigorous growth and so productive that some clusters need support. Has superior shipping qualities over any other variety.

THE acreage of peas contracted for by 278 canning factories in 1918 was 112,096 compared with 109,061 last year.

EDMONTON, ALTA.—Nearly 8,000 vacant lots in this city and vicinity have been reported in the war garden movement.

SINCE the United States entered the war, there have been purchased for army use 1,714,921 bushels of dry beans at a cost of $12,613,409.

BULLETIN No. 180, entitled "Root Crop Culture in South Dakota," has been issued by the South Dakota State College of Agriculture, Brookings.

ACCORDING to reports received from 441 canning factories, 231,841 acres of sweet corn were contracted for this year compared with 227,240 in 1917.

It is estimated that 61,700 acres of commercial cabbages were planted this year against 58,950 acres harvested in 1917, indicating a crop of 561,610 tons compared with 575,220.

THE department of agriculture in order to prevent the introduction into the United States of the banana root borer, an injurious insect not heretofore widely prevalent in this country, has placed a quarantine against the importation of banana plants or portions thereof from all foreign countries.

Tomato Contracts Increase.

As reported to the bureau of crop estimates, 1,399 canning factories contracted for the 1918 production of 213,890 acres of tomatoes. In 1917 the same factories contracted for the production of 207,674 acres. One hundred and eighteen factories that did not report in 1917 have contracted this year for the production of 18,172 acres. Eighty-nine factories were reported as idle in 1918.

"Three Acres and Liberty."

THE above is the title of an interesting book by Bolton Hall (revised edition), consisting of 276 pages and numerous excellent illustrations, it being the author's aim to show what is needed for a city man or woman to support a family on the proceeds of a small piece of land, together with the necessity of better methods in agriculture to relieve the problems of the day. Included in the contents are chapters devoted to the following subjects: Making a living, where and how, and the possibilities of an acre; present conditions; how to buy the farm; vacant city lot cultivation; tools and equipment; the advantages of capital; hotbeds and greenhouses; other uses of land; fruits, flowers and drug plants; clearing the land; how to build; coming profession for boys; practical experiments; retail co-operation, summer colonies for city people, etc. The book can be had at THE AMERICAN FLORIST office; price, $1.55.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, November 5.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $1.50 to $3.00; celery, crate, 50 to 90 cents; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.75 to $2.50; radishes, per 100 bunches, $1.00 to $1.50; tomatoes, per box, 35 to 40 cents.

New York, November 5.—Celery (state), per bunch, 15 to 60 cents; cucumbers, $1.25 to $1.75 per dozen; mushrooms, 50 cents to $1.25 per basket; tomatoes, per carrier, 50 cents to $3.00; lettuce, per package, 25 cents to $1.50; radishes, per 100 bunches, $1.50 to $2.50.

Electrical Stimulation on Plants.

SINCE the general belief has been, that rational electrification of plants favors their development, increases growth and hastens maturity, and as it seemed desirable to prove or disprove the efficacy of this method, the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis, conducted experiments, the results of which are given in the Missouri Botanical Garden Bulletin of October, 1918. An apparatus was secured from France and set up in the Garden. This consisted of a so-called "electrifier" constructed of bronze with five prongs of pure nickel, non-rustible and infusible, a copper wire attached to the bottom of the bronze part, a pole 15-35 feet long, a switch, a galvanized iron pulley with an eye for fastening to the pole, a tarred rope for sliding the electrifier down to the base and two porcelains for attaching the rope to the pole. The soil was removed to a depth of one and one-half feet, the radius of the plot being equal to the length of the pole;

the pulley was affixed to the top of the pole, while the switch and porcelains were placed near the base; the tarred rope was passed through the pulley in order to permit of lowering the electrifier to examine the points occasionally; the pole was then placed in the ground deep enough to be absolutely stable; one-eighth inch galvanized iron wire was stretched every three feet at the base of the pole and connected with the copper wire attached to the electrifier; finally the soil was moved back over the wires, the plot being ready for planting.

Based upon three year averages, the following results are reported:

Treatment	Crop	Average Growth	Average Yield	Date Maturity
Elect'r'd.	Tomatoes	.13 ft.	12	July 10
Non-elec.	Tomatoes	.11 ft.	7	July 22
Elect'r'd.	Corn	.13 ft.	2	Aug. 10

The Nursery Trade

American Association of Nurserymen.

J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., President; J. Edward Moon, Morrisville, Pa., Vice-President; Curtis Nye Smith, 19 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Secretary and Counsel. Forty-four annual convention will be held at Chicago in 1919.

ENGLISH nurserymen report the cost of cases has increased 300 per cent above pre-war prices.

TORONTO, ONT.—Fred Good has resigned as superintendent of parks for the eastern district of this city.

Rosa Souleana.

This Chinese rose stands conspicuous among other species by reason of its great vigor. It grows at least 15 feet high, forming vigorous and intensely thorny stems amply furnished with branchlets bearing glaucous green leaves about four inches long. The creamy white flowers, each about 1½ inches across, are borne in large clusters in June and are followed by orange-colored fruits. Planted in good soil where it has ample room for development, it spreads in the course of a few years into a large impenetrable mass, a tangle of thorny branches clothed with luxuriant foliage and, in their proper seasons, a wealth of flowers and fruits. It has been crossed with Hiawatha at Kew, and a very pretty pink, free-flowering hybrid is the result. Other hybrids from the same cross have white flowers.—London Garden.

Red or Scarlet Maple.

The flowers of the red maple are red on some individuals and on others pale yellow, trees with flowers of these two colors growing together over a large part of the region inhabited by this tree. On some trees the autumn leaves are of different shades of red or scarlet and on others clear yellow. If any reader of these bulletins has noticed if the autumn color of the leaves of trees with red flowers is red and that of trees with yellow flowers is yellow, the Arboretum will be glad to hear from him on the subject. On the left-hand side of the Meadow road, not far from the Jamaica Plain entrance and opposite the Administration building, there is a red maple with unusually dark crimson autumn leaves. This tree is interesting from the exceptionally beautiful color of the leaves at this season and from the fact that it is a grafted tree raised to show the possibility of propagating trees exceptional in the color of their autumn foliage. This branch of arboriculture has not been much practiced, but when it is realized that the leaves on some individual trees or shrubs of a species assume more brilliant colors than those of other individuals of the same species, that this peculiarity is constant from year to year and that it can be preserved and multiplied by grafting, there is no reason why a demand for trees with exceptionally beautiful autumn leaves should not make possible the supply, just as the demand for trees of abnormal habit or with abnormal foliage, like a mulberry with pendulous branches or a beech with purple leaves, has created the supply.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, October 18, 1918.

Holland Nurserymen Organize.

In a communication from W. F. Wery, secretary of the Holland Plant Exporters' Association, The Hague, dated September 27, 1918, attention is called to the fact that the majority of Holland growers and exporters of nursery stock have followed the example of the American Association of Nurserymen and formed an organization to protect the interests of its members and adjust business to the entirely new conditions prevailing due to the war. The following regulations have been sanctioned, the failure to observe any of which will result in a heavy penalty:

1. No auctions are allowed in countries where a regular trade in plants has been established.

2. Goods are only sold f. o. b. seller's nurseries.

3. No orders will be executed for firms as long as such firms will not have settled their accounts of the previous season, either with the seller or with other members of the association.

4. All accounts are due net, strictly three months after date of invoice. Interest at the rate of one-half per cent per month will be charged on overdue accounts.

5. Claims not made within eight days after the arrival of goods cannot be given consideration.

Gardener War Hero.

Lieutenant Marcel Levie, a student of landscape gardening in Paris when war was declared, and who immediately volunteered for service in the French army, was a visitor to the War Exposition held at Chicago September 2-15, whose presence was of unusual interest. The lieutenant, who celebrated his twenty-third birthday anniversary September 2, is the youngest member of the Legion of Honor and has also been awarded the French war cross, the British military cross, the cross of St. Stanislaus, the Regimental Fouragere and the bar pin of gallantry. He also wears seven stripes and carries 11 wounds, the first being received in Champagne in 1914. In December of the same year, at Argonne, two dum-dum bullets tore his shoulder to pieces. At Beauséjour, in February, 1915, a hand grenade lacerated his face and filled his legs with shot as he was crossing "No Man's Land" in a charge, and in October a gas attack in Flanders again sent him to the hospital. On Christmas day of the same year, while with his regiment on the Aisne, two bullets shattered his left arm, paralyzing the left side of his body, and for three months following he was out of his mind and a prisoner of war. In February, 1916, he was included in the exchange of wounded prisoners, and soon after was back in action, this time at Verdun, where, while holding a charge against the Germans, shrapnel tore out one eye and practically destroyed the sight of the other. At the same time he also received a bullet at short range, in the back, and lay for four days in a shell hole, having been twice picked up and abandoned by the Huns.

Small wonder the British Royal Flying Corps saluted, Jackies from the Great Lakes saluted and stood at attention, and the crowds opened a way to one having so voluminous a record, maimed, nearly blind—but smiling.

MCKEESPORT, PA.—James B. Smith, the well-known florist, has been confined to his home with influenza, but is making rapid recovery. Business at his establishment has been unusually brisk, it being impossible to fill all orders.

No More Soot Troubles Z-I-N-C-O WHAT IT IS

Soot Destroyer is a harmless combination of chemicals. When this powder is spread lightly over a good hot fire the gas fumes resulting turn the soot into a light ash easily carried off by the draft, reaches places never touched by the operation of cleaning. It follows the draft and burns the soot thoroughly, prevents the discharge of large volumes of soot into the atmosphere, to cause complaints and become a criminal nuisance to yourself and your neighbors. It is very inexpensive to buy—simple and easy to use. The average cost per week is but a few cents. It is a fine flue saver as boiler surfaces are always exposed to the heating units. A clean boiler steams very easily and is a great labor saver. It does an A-1 job, without any effort on your part. All largest plants in 41 states. Join these up-to-the-minute types of boilers—all types of stokers—and all kinds of

WHAT IT DOES

Z-I-N-C-O

Soot Destroyer will put pep into your boilers—make them deliver. It will keep them young and make old boilers beat like new. It will reduce ash and dirt. It will increase your draft.

"Ain't it a Grand and Glorious Feeling?"

WHAT IT DOES

Z-I-N-C-O

It destroys the worst cases of soot and soot scale, increases the efficiency of your boilers with less fuel, does this work quickly—easily and cheaply. Does all this for a few cents per week—with no extras.

Note

The makers of Z-I-N-C-O have agreed to supply us with a number of small packages of this unusual article. The quantity is limited. The price is $3.00. If you have soot troubles, order one at once.

AMPLE SUPPLY TO MEET DEMAND.

The thermometer fell to 30 degrees above zero here, last week, and put an end to all kinds of outdoor flowers. The demand has continued without abatement all during the week, with a heavier call during the latter part than since the beginning of the epidemic. Business has been normal apart from this demand, with flowers for the sick and counter trade the main standbys. The supply of flowers is now adequate to meet all demands, on account of the heavy crops of chrysanthemums that are coming in. Chrysanthemum plants are appearing in the flower shops in large numbers, and are selling on sight. Carnations are showing much improvement in quality since the advent of colder weather, and longer stemmed flowers are being offered. The rose crop is excellent for this time of the year, Hoosier Beauty and Columbia making an especially fine showing.

NOTES.

The recent ruling in regard to allowing florists a 100 per cent supply of coal was joyfully received in this city, and many of the florists, who had obtained only 50 per cent, are making arrangements to obtain their full supply. In view of the recent heavy call for flowers, the growers are more anxious to produce stock in larger quantities for this winter's trade.

W. J. & M. S. Vesey are cutting larger crops of chrysanthemums and roses than ever before at this season. This firm will have greenhouse lettuce ready for the market within a few days, and are expecting a fine crop of tomatoes for Thanksgiving.

Some fine Wm. Turner, Chadwick, Poehmann, and Halliday chrysanthemums are being sent to this market from the greenhouses of the New Haven Floral Co. at New Haven, Ind. Their chrysanthemum cut is very heavy at present.

Out-of-town funeral work, including a number of casket covers, was in exceptionally good demand at Lanterrier's last week. Counter trade has been very good at this establishment.

Mrs. Lillian Underhill, sister of Fred Lemon, the florist of Richmond, Ind., and also sister-in-law to Judge W. J. Vesey, is very low at her home here, suffering with a stroke of paralysis.

The Freese Floral Co. sent out a large number of designs the past week, and report hospital trade heavier than it has been for weeks.

Exhibition Better Than Anticipated.

The exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America held in conjunction with the American Institute of the City of New York at the Engineering building, November 6-8, may be summarized as excellent so far as the quality of the stock was concerned, but in the number of entries there was a large decrease from former years. However, with so many of the private estates having closed their greenhouses, it may be said that the show was better than might have been expected.

Considering the all-important war conditions that affected the whole world within the past four years, and with particular reference to what the people of this country have cheerfully done and endured, it was not to be presumed that a flower show, held at this time, would bring out as many exhibitors as the shows that were held in times of peace. Yet there is no cause for regrets. It should rather be a matter for congratulation that a faithful few could overcome obstacles and "keep the home fires burning," to the end that the public's interest in flowers and the florist business in general should not wane and grow cold.

As previously intimated, the number of exhibitors was smaller than in previous years, but a large amount of excellent stock was shown, much of it from private estates. Of such exhibitors and prize winners, noteworthy were: Mrs. Payne Whitney, Manhasset, N. Y. (Geo. Ferguson, gr.); Percy Chubb, Glen Cove, N. Y. (Robert Jones, gr.); Mrs. E. S. Bayer, Mt. Kisco, N. Y. (Alexander Thomson, gr.); Walter J. Jennings, Cold Spring Harbor, N. Y.

(Frank W. Sergeant, gr.); Major L. L. Dunham, Madison, N. J. (Ernest Wild, gr.); Miss M. T. Cockcroft, Saugatuck, Conn. (Adam Peterson, gr.); Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Covent Station, N. J. (Robert Tyson, gr.); James Fraser, Woodbury, N. Y., and R. E. Jones, Elberon, N. J., all of whom made good exhibits in chrysanthemums.

President Totty, of the Society of American Florists, in his unofficial and commercial role of grower and disseminator of fine chrysanthemums, roses and other stock, has always been a good scout to help out the shows, and this year he made a grand effort. In addition to a number of prize-winning varieties, he added greatly to the attractiveness of the show by filling in vacant places with a great variety of pompons and singles. He also took the C. S. A. silver cup for the best seedling chrysanthemum, not disseminated; first prize for 24 blooms, one variety, long stems, and first for 24 blooms in 24 distinct varieties, one bloom of each, 10-inch stems. He had on exhibition 10 vases of new single chrysanthemums, which were examined by the committee on examination of new stocks. He made a fine display of his new and pink rose, Premier, a seedling of Mrs. Russell, which experts believe will prove superior to Russell.

John Condon, a commercial grower of Brooklyn, N. Y. (Fred Wilshire, grower), had good exhibits, taking first prize for 10 blooms of white chrysanthemums, long stems, and second for 24 blooms, one variety, long stems.

John C. Pratt, Glen Cove, N. Y. (J. W. Everett, gr.), took first prize for 20 vases of pompons. W. J. Sealy, Portchester, N. Y., took first for 10 vases of pompons.

In looking over the various exhibits of large blooms, in variety, in the prize-winning classes, one notes old and familiar names. William Turner, for instance, has been going to shows for a number of years, and always comes out a prize winner. Other noteworthy favorites seen at this show were: Bob Pulling, Louisa Pockett, Pockett's Crimson, Beatrice May, Mrs. J. Gibson, Mrs. Firestone, Yellow Turner, Francis Jolliffe, Mrs. R. C. Pulling, E. Scoville, Mrs. Gilbert Drabble, F. S. Vallis, Wm. Rigby, Mary Mason, Wm. Woodmason, Nag-ir-roc, Earl Kitchner, Mendon and Elberon.

A pink sport of white Turner was shown by Mrs. L. Leslie Davis (Frank Colt, sr.), which attracted considerable attention, but as it was taken away from the show on the first evening, one could scarcely form a fair opinion of its merits.

Only a few vases of roses, carnations and violets were exhibited by private estates, and Chas. H. Totty was the only commercial grower that exhibited roses.

The arrangement and details were cleverly managed by W. A. Eagleson, secretary of the American Institute, and W. C. Rickards.

The judges were John G. McCnoll, Eugene Dailedouze, Peter Duff, William Turner and Alexander MacKenzie. The awards follow:

The Business Session.

The annual meeting was held in the assembly room on the afternoon of November 6. President William W. Vert opened the meeting and in the absence of Secretary C. W. Johnson, Arthur Herrington, of Madison, N. J., acted as secretary pro tem. On behalf of the American Institute, Mr. Herrington, who is one of the board of managers of the Institute, in well chosen remarks, welcomed the members of the society. He stated, owing to adverse conditions, that are so well known as resulting from the war that had operated to make the present show not up to those of former years, the American Institute invited the Chrysanthemum Society of America to meet with it again in New York in 1919. President Vert then read his address and the reports of the secretary and the treasurer were received and accepted after they had been audited by a special committee consisting of Eugene Dailedouze and Charles H. Totty. A discussion of the president's address followed and his suggestion that medals be offered in competition at the shows of local societies was generally approved but action thereon deferred. There was also a discussion relating to the lack of interest in the society that is at times shown by exhibitors at the shows. They enjoy the privileges of the exhibitions without joining the society and aside from their own exhibits, appear to take little interest otherwise. It was decided that exhibitors, hereafter, who are not members of the society, shall be charged an entry fee of $2. The invitation of the American Institute to meet in joint exhibition again next year was, on motion, accepted.

Election of Officers.

The election of officers resulted as follows: William W. Vert, Greenwich, Conn., president; William Turner, Oceanic, N. J., vice-president; Charles W. Johnson, Morgan Park, Chicago, secretary; John N. May, Summit, N. J., treasurer. Excepting Vice-President Turner all the officers were re-elected.

President Vert's Address.

Another year has rolled around and we are once more assembled for our seventeenth annual meeting. This year, the list of exhibitions throughout the country will be very much reduced, due to the fact that most of the large private estates are closed, and therefore, the number of growers of exhibition flowers is much smaller than in previous years. It is to be hoped before another year has passed the fuel administrator will permit the large private greenhouses to have coal, as they have been accustomed to have, so horticulture may once more be carried on in its accustomed plane.

As you are all probably aware, the society last year voted to meet with the Chrysanthemum Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

A Snow-White Seedling, One of the Features at the Exhibition of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Pittsburgh Gardeners' and Florists' Club and the Western Pennsylvania Horticultural Society. These two societies, in conjunction with the Sewickley Horticultural Society, were anxious to make the 1918 convention a success, and I have no doubt they would have done so. It is a matter of regret that owing to local conditions they were unable to carry out their contract and asked to be released from their arrangement. The American Institute of the City of New York, on being asked if they would again take up the invitation they forwarded last fall, stated it would and were glad to do so, and to it our grateful thanks are due for placing these rooms and exhibition hall at our disposal. This is the reason we are here today.

While the large exhibitions may not be so numerous throughout the country this fall, still the fact remains there is a great liking among the average citizens for the chrysanthemum. This is shown by the quantities of blooms growing everywhere in the gardens. The present fall, so far, has been wonderfully favorable for the chrysanthemum outdoors, the singles, early-flowering and pompons being equally fine. Under such favorable conditions, it is a matter of surprise that we do not have scores of amateur growers who would be glad to join this society and contribute their dues to help out the finances.

The chrysanthemum season is so short, it seems hard to hold the interest of the new members from year to year, and if any of our older members have suggestions to offer along these lines, we shall be only too glad to hear from them.

Before closing, I would suggest that the medals of the C. S. A. be offered to the horticultural societies throughout the country, where it is shown that such exhibitions are of sufficient importance to warrant this, which I believe has been done previously, when asked. This would give every member an opportunity to compete for these medals at their local exhibitions or clubs. However, I consider this should be restricted to C. S. A. members.

Secretary Johnson's Report.

Your secretary begs to report his work for the past year as follows:

At the annual meeting held in Cleveland, O., November 8, 1917, the invitation of the Pittsburgh Gardeners' and Florists' Club, The Sewickley Horticultural Society and the Western Pennsylvania Horticultural Society to hold the C. S. A. 1918 meeting and exhibition in conjunction with their 1918 flower show was accepted. After arranging for a number of special prizes for the exhibition, your secretary received a letter from the secretary of the Pittsburgh Gardeners' and Florists' Club stating that owing to the unsettled conditions of the country it was thought best not to hold a flower show until the conditions became normal again. Then they would be pleased to again extend the C. S. A. an invitation to meet at Pittsburgh.

Your secretary took the matter up with President Wm. W. Vert, who made arrangements with the American Institute for the 1918 meeting and exhibition. A second letter to the firms and individuals offering the special prizes brought a responsive sanction for all the prizes to be transferred to the present exhibition. Your secretary appreciates on behalf of the society, the kindness of those whose generosity makes the list of special prizes possible.

As instructed at the last annual meeting, your secretary had 20,000 applications for membership forms printed and sent to the leading chrysanthemum growers for insertion in their 1918 catalogue. So far the gain in new members has scarcely paid for the outlay.

The general outlook for the chrysanthemum is very satisfactory. Not for many years has the demand for cut blooms been as heavy as this season. The pompons and single varieties are also being called for in larger quantities.

The routine work of the secretary's office, consisting of sending out statements to the members, recording the varieties disseminated, getting out the report of the sixteenth annual meeting, and the solicitation of special premiums, was attended to in due season. Your secretary wishes to acknowledge the kindness of Elmer D. Smith in furnishing him with a complete list of varieties disseminated in 1917, which was a great help in getting up the annual report.

The trade papers very generously published all notices sent to them from time to time during the year, for which we owe to them a vote of thanks.

Wm. W. Vert, Greenwich, Conn.

Dep't of Agri. Chrysanthemum Display.

For the first time in the 16 years since it was established, the annual chrysanthemum show of the United States department of agriculture at Washington, D. C., has been held under lock and key. Owing to the ban laid upon public meetings by the health authorities in their campaign against the influenza epidemic, the superintendent of the bureau of plant industry greenhouses, has been unable to throw the department's chrysanthemum exhibit open to the public, and thus thousands of Washington people who have been accustomed to seeing the show year after year have been forced to forego viewing one of the most attractive floral exhibitions ever staged by the department. Only a limited number of persons in official circles have been privileged to see the massed display, though many will have opportunity to see individual blooms from the collection, since by direction of the secretary of agriculture, the superintendent is systematically cutting hundreds of magnificent seedlings and sending them to the sick and wounded soldiers in the military hospitals in and about the capital.

A dozen or more new varieties are featured in this year's show. Among these, the center of attraction is a great, snow-white seedling that has been named for Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. This bloom has many of the characteristics of the well established favorite, Queen Mary, and the Mrs. Woodrow Wilson bids fair to become a standard commercial variety.

As was the case with last year's show, when the General Pershing was among the leading attractions, the military note is very much in the ascendancy in the nomenclature of the specimens on exhibition. Marshal Foch leads the military delegation, a very striking Japanese seedling of a deep wine color. Lieutenant-General Liggett, named in honor of the American officer who led in the offensive that wiped out the St. Mihiel salient, is an enormous bloom, red with gold reverse, the largest produced by the department greenhouses this season. Another red and gold seedling has been named for Admiral Sims, sailors from English, French, and American ships participating in the christening. Beautiful examples of the General Pershing and the General Kuhn, of last year's creation, and of the older Marshal Joffre, were among the blooms on view that bore the names of military or naval heroes.

Three magnificent blooms, each red with gold reverse, but each differing from the others in detail, represented the rank and file of the American army in the display. They were named for Corporal James S. Enright, and Privates James Bethel Gresham and Merle D. Hay, the immortal three who were the first of many thousand American soldiers to give their lives for freedom on French soil.

Among other new varieties of more or less special interest may be mentioned the Mme. Jusserand, a peach-blossom pink named in honor of the wife of the French ambassador; the Mrs. Asbury F. Lever, iridescent pink, in honor of the wife of the chairman of the house committee of agriculture; the Helen Houston, pompon seedling, in honor of the daughter of the secretary of agriculture; the Mrs. Helen P. Taylor, white pompon, tinged with pink, in honor of the wife of the chief of the bureau of plant industry; the Mrs. Karl F. Kellerman, brick red with gold reverse, in honor of the wife of the assistant chief of the bureau, and the Mrs. Holbrook Blinn, variegated pink pompon, in honor of the wife of the well-known actor, now touring with Blanche Bates in the war play, "Get Together."

FALL EXHIBITION.

The above named society held an exhibition of chrysanthemums and other stock in the American Museum of Natural History, November 7-10. In the past this society has been noted for good autumn shows. Under present conditions it was not to be expected that displays, equal to former years, could be made. With private estates shutting down their greenhouses, and commercial ranges curtailing and economizing, it takes perseverance to arrange for a show. Although the exhibits of cut stock fell off in comparison with former years, there were good features in both cut flowers and plants. Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J., Joseph 150 varieties of Tradescantia fluminensis, Zebina pendula and Saxifraga sarmentosa, all of which are commonly known as "Wandering Jew," for which he was awarded a silver medal, and a silver medal for a specimen plant of Fourcroya Watsoni; also a special prize for other foliage plants. Theodore R. Hoyt, Stamford, Conn. (Jas. Foster, gr.), was awarded a special prize for a specimen plant of Cypripedium (sedeni), bearing nearly 50 flowers. In addition to a gold medal for a collection of Cypripedium insignis Landeria, Joseph A. Manda was awarded a silver medal for a new hybrid cypripedium named Sergeant Manda, in honor of his son who is in the American army in France. Lager & Hurrell were awarded a silver medal for specimen plants of new orchids. An exhibit that attracted much attention, particularly from the ladies, was that of dehydrated fruit and vegetables, by Mrs. Geo. D. Pratt, Glen Cove, N. Y., awarded a silver medal.

In several past years there was keen competition in the exhibition of large bush, standard and pillar chrysanthemum plants, particularly between John Canning, superintendent for Adolph Lewisoohn and W. H. Waite, when he was superintendent for Samuel Untermeyer, of Greystone, N. Y. Neither of those estates exhibited this year, but Robert Marshall, gardener for J. R. De Lamar, Glen Cove, N. Y., saved the day, so to speak, with a fine collection of large plants; 11 in all. There were in color, white, yellow, pink and bronze and they were trained as bushes, standards, pillars and pagodas. For a pagoda, the yellow chrysanthemum, Mrs. R. H. Pearson, being grown, he was awarded a gold medal. As there was no competition, he took first prize on most of the others. The varieties in this selection were, in addition to Mrs. R. H. Pearson, Lady Lydia, white; Wells' Lake Pink, Miss Elva Scoville, white, and Greystone, bronze. This collection filled the large circular room near the entrance to the museum. The Julius Roehrs Company, Rutherford, N. J., was awarded a special prize for a collection of rare orchids.

Mrs. F. Allen, Pelham, Manor, N. Y., for a collection of dahlias arranged with foliage was awarded a special prize, as was Mrs. H. W. Chapin, Flushing, N. Y., for hardy chrysanthemums, and E. H. Wells, Montclair, N. J., for single pink seedling chrysanthemum.

A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., staged a splendid exhibit of hardy chrysanthemums.

John Scheepers & Co., New York, exhibited a collection of their winter flowering begonias, which won a special prize. Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J., had the main show room finely decorated with many large palms. John Scheepers & Co. also exhibited a vase of Pancratium ovatum, which attracted attention.

In addition to previously mentioned awards on orchids, Lager & Harrell took first prize for a collection, not less than 25 varieties, covering 50 square feet of table space. This was a very handsome exhibit.

Mrs. Payne Whitney exhibited a vase of Salvia leucantha, handsome flowers that are seldom seen in exhibitions.

The judging was in the capable hands of Alex. Robertson, W. H. Waite, Robert Angus and Wm. Robertson. A. J. Manda, who is now with his brother, W. A. Manda, at South Orange, N. J., superintended the exhibition.

Sensitive.

Be kind to the hypocondriac plant!

Its nervous and ladylike qualms,

Its delicate frailty you surely must grant,

For it faints at all songs except psalms.

Speak low near a maidenhair fern! You will note

It trembles with slight if you about—

It gurgles best when you've got a sore throat.

And is pleased by the very devout.

Be firm with a rubber plant! Put it away

When your friends come to make you a call.

It is dreadful to find how a secret will stray

When you thought no one knew it at all.

Be gay near begonias! Their gorgeous array

Betokens a sensitive blush.

To secure best results, a story risque

Will bring the desirable flush.

Then be good to the plants! For a great botanist

Says their sensitiveness is intense;

They are shocked if a girl should chance to be

And will die at a moral offense.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

Now that the situation has become normal, it is time to make the most of one's own trade and exploit it to the limit. Every customer on the books is a more or less valued patron, whose business should be encouraged and invited in every possible way. Every

Make a good display of house plants. This is their season. As the city homes are being opened up, there will be a demand for all this class of stock. Table ferns and their receptacles should be kept well displayed, as many a fine account has been established from satisfactory work in the filling of these small commissions. Where there is a greenhouse in connection with the store, six, seven and eight-inch pans can be filled with ferns all of a kind, such as the holly and other hardy varieties. These will soon get set and can often be week there should be a "special" of some kind, not necessarily at a reduced price, but something seasonable that is a little unusual, such as white tubs with the bands gilded, filled with several one color chrysanthemums out of six-inch pots. Arrange with a grower and furnish him with a dozen or so of such tubs, that are to be filled with hardy ivies and trained to trellises. When stood in the greenhouse for a couple of weeks, all the leaves turn one way, and there is then an inviting plant for the vestibule.

Another seasonable and popular plant for house culture at this time is the Paper White narcissus. These bulbs are scarce this season, and one has to speak quick to get anything like a supply. They are easily grown in the house in pebbles in low dishes. Quite a number of "out-of-date" ferneries have been worked off for this purpose. Selected bulbs of hyacinths can be grown in water in the house with excellent results. A small display of this character will interest customers who would otherwise forget that this is the season to start them.

The later varieties of chrysanthemums are now in full supply; a window display of from one to three flowers, with rather stout stems, a vase to a kind, all labeled, will attract attention. Some enterprising storekeepers find a display of these fall beauties, when they are at their height, is a good drawing card and productive of considerable business. The number of pompon varieties is increasing each year; they have established their importance and are deservedly popular.

transferred as a whole to a table dish of the same size, saving time and giving greater satisfaction.

Make up a plant basket or two. These present a very artistic appearance, particularly when decorated, with a few choice flowers in glass tubes, concealed in the foliage. Finish with a suitable bow of ribbon. Examples of this kind, besides being decorative, put a stamp of superiority on the store that is well worth while. One or two well made corsages in stock, ready to wear, are frequently just the thing a hurried customer is looking for. They also give an idea to the young man who does not know just what he wants. Well made corsages of violets sell, when the indifferent bunches as they come from the grower, will remain in the case. Small green galax leaves are a great help in keeping the violet leaves in place.

Do not forget that Christmas is coming, and that all the preliminary work possible should occupy spare moments. Everything in the supply line should be on hand, or if not, ordered at once. Delays are dangerous. Preparedness is the watchword in these days of labor shortage. How about the supply of boxes, tags and other like essentials? If there is not enough to see you safely over the holidays, and leave a comfortable surplus, get busy at once, as goods are no longer delivered on a week's notice.

With something over $5,000 lacking to take the publicity fund over the top, there are thousands who if they only gave one dollar each, would make an amount that should easily take it across. Sit down right now and write a check for $5 and mail it immediately to John Young, 1170 Broadway, New York, or better still, add $2 and get the beautiful sign, "Say It With Flowers." It will be worth a dollar a week to have it in your window.

A Victory Window.

Every retail florist all over this broad land should feature for a week, at least, a "Victory" window. There is no better way to celebrate this great event than to "Say It With Flowers," and at the same time show something original in decorative effect. Flags will, of course, enter largely in every arrangement. A good background consists of a coupe of fair-sized flags, the fields meeting in the center. These are festooned across the back of the window and projecting from the center should be a cluster of the flags of the allies.

A large crescent magnolia wreath with palms, a red, white and blue shield of appropriate size, in the full part of the crescent, and the addition of small flags of the allies, will make an appropriate center. A broad, red, white and blue ribbon across the center of the wreath, with the word "Victory," in gilt letters, gives an added significance.

A victory basket, made of any red, white and blue flowers, and decorated with a victory ribbon, if large enough, will make a good center, as will also a flag of immortelles. Pictures of Pershing and the allied generals can be arranged to advantage.

A draped flag over a pedestal, on which stands a bust of Gen. Pershing, while leaning against the pedestal in front should be a choice magnolia wreath with palm leaves and victory ribbon. This will be sure to attract attention.

Tumbler or small vase baskets, filled with red, white and blue flowers, or with roses, all of one color, and tied with tricolor ribbon, will be both decorative and salable. There will also be a demand for corsages of violets, with red and white roses tied with tricolor ribbon. Featuring these in the windows will interest and attract customers, which business is likely to lead to other sales.

The above are but a few suggestions. In 100 well decorated windows of this character there will be found no two alike. There is no question, however, but that they will attract great attention at this time, and be well worth the effort and material expended on them.

Gardenias in the Flower Case.

Gardenias are best kept and ready for sale in a metal or wooden box, enclosed with a lid, or in a drawer of smaller construction in the flower case. Pasteboard boxes will answer but soon become soft from the water. A folded sheet of tissue of several thicknesses covers the bottom, which is sprinkled; on this are laid the sprays from which all cotton or other protective material has been removed. These must not be crowded together, but should have room to show each flower to good advantage. They are then sprinkled. Some florists are afraid to wet the flowers for fear of spotting them. They will not spot if treated in this way—will not wilt or shrivel, keeping a good appearance for several days. Some remove the lower foliage, place a half dozen in a jar of water and cover them with wax paper; there is much more danger of their getting bruised in this way, and frequently they become soft and wilted.

Opportunity—Lost or Found?

This will be best answered when we arrive at our board meeting to be held in Buffalo some time in January to determine our policy for the year in regard to our national publicity campaign, and it will be tested by the spirit manifested at the meeting.

Whether the enthusiasm is to wax or lack, will have an important bearing upon those of the committee present as to whether the florists of the country are ready to back the financial and publicity committees by continuing to a greater impetus in our publicity work.

If we go with a desire to do better than ever, we will be embracing the opportunity that is now before us—that of doing things in a broad, wholesome way, and of making those who are with us, and those who will follow, feel that there are still bigger things in store for the florists than ever before, providing they have confidence, and back it up with their dollars, to help build this campaign to the proper proportion to which it is justly entitled. That it will grow bigger, there is no doubt, but now is the time to establish this bond of personal relationship in business by keeping the family of contributors active in the results they will ultimately receive.

So this campaign of "Say It With Flowers" is really a test whether your opportunity is to be lost or found in its further acceptance.

HENRY PENN,
Chairman National Pub. Campaign.

F. T. D. Contest Suggestions.

So much Florists' Telegraph Delivery food has been jammed into those who attended the Cleveland meeting in the two days' session that it will take just as long to digest it all, as it takes a normal person to overcome an overloaded stomach.

In digging through some of the papers from this meeting. I came across the file with the various suggestions sent in for competition, and as I have made a study of F. T. D. work for the past eight years, I feel in justice to all those who have participated in this contest, and without casting any reflection on the committee whose duty it was to judge this contest, that a good deal of valuable information and suggestions for the benefit of the F. T. D. is among the correspondence of those who were not the prize winners. I feel it, therefore, my duty to personally thank all the participants in this contest, and have only one wish, that is, to know who the different parties are. Sooner or later, one or the other participants will find that part of his suggestion will be adopted in one way or the other to carry on our F. T. D. work, while I hardly think the suggestions of the prize winner can ever be carried out and be practical for several reasons:

1st. The F. T. D. has never and should never be allowed or have to bow down to as low an arrangement as buying in their membership. Retailers who cannot see their benefit, will never make good members if their membership is forced upon them.

2nd. If a traveling man enlists a new member in a town where we are not represented, he perhaps has been the last of 10 or 12 who has tried to make this certain retailer see the benefit of belonging to this organization. This same retailer has filled perhaps a number of orders for our members, and every one of our members has brought some pressure at one time or another to make him join the F. T. D. and yet, according to the prize winner's suggestion, the traveling man that happens to come along just at the time when this retailer is ready to join would have all the credit to himself for which perhaps 25 or 30 others have worked hard. The F. T. D., as an organization, does not care who gets retailers to join our membership, as long as we get them, and get them without buying them in.

3rd. The traveling man is liable to get retailers to join who cannot qualify according to rules and regulations and endless correspondence would result.

4th. The traveling men are our co-workers and will gain indirectly through our building up larger fields of business, and most of them that I know, would not consent to accept any pay, if perchance they could be the medium of enlightening a retailer in a small town, whereby he can find and build up a nice little extra business by joining the F. T. D.

Perhaps I could dig up a few more good reasons, but let that be enough. The good points sent in with the suggestions are valuable to our organization, and I only hope that some of the trade papers will consent at one time or another to publish some of these suggestions. I shall be glad and hope to have the permission of those who have sent them in to send them to the editors of our various trade papers.

Hoping that some of the contestants will read this article and will let me have the duplicate copies with their name, I shall appreciate this very much and will be glad to know the different parties.

Yours for a better retail florist trade.
ALBERT POCHOLON.

Providence, R. I.

SUPPLY INCREASES AND PRICES FALL.

The closing week of October brought with it some warm weather, which sent along great quantities of greenhouse stock. As a result the supply increased and the demand not being as heavy prices dropped somewhat. Chrysanthemums are still holding their own, but roses and carnations have weakened, some stock selling as low as two cents. Violets are arriving and sell at sight. Pansies of good size are plentiful. Lilies continue scarce. Asparagus is selling well and the same is true of pot plants.

NOTES.

There were several good Halloween displays in this city, among the best being one arranged by T. J. Johnston & Co., vegetables, cornstalks and chrysanthemums being used.

Ernst Carl, the Lowell avenue florist, was knocked down last week by a horse and wagon and severely bruised. He is getting along nicely, however.

Local growers have not planted half of their usual quantity of chrysanthemums this year and it looks like a shortage for Thanksgiving.

John F. Wood has opened a small store on Empire street for the chrysanthemum season.

Mrs. Mary F. Pollock has removed her store from No. 14 to No. 50 Beacon avenue.

DES MOINES, IA.—The Mid-west Horticultural Exposition, which was to have been held in this city, November 5-8, has been postponed to December 10-13, on account of the state quarantine on influenza conditions.

New York Florists' Club.

The New York Florists' Club met in its rooms in the Grand Opera House building on the night of November 11, President Schenck in the chair. Considering that the entire city was establishing a world-record in celebrating the signing of the armistice, there was a good attendance at the meeting.

President Totty, of the Society of American Florists, who had attended the hearing given by the federal board at Washington, recently, on the importation of nursery stock, spoke on that subject. He stated that J. D. Eisele, of Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, Pa., who spoke for the importers, brought out many good points in favor of importation, but summing up, the federal board had stated that they had the power and would use it in their own time.

Patrick O'Mara made felicitous remarks, indulging in reminiscences of his 50 years' connection with horticulture in this city and vicinity. If he can remember back for 50 years, he must be some older, but does not look it.

Appropriate resolutions were read relating to the death of Louis Schmutz, Jr., of Brooklyn, and A. V. D. Snyder, of Ridgewood, N. J., both having been club members, and on the death of C. B. Weathered, Jr., son of C. B. Weathered, formerly president of the club. The young man was "killed in action", in France. A letter was read from A. T. De La Mare, conveying the thanks of William Dick and wife, of Scotland, parents of the late J. Harrison Dick, for resolutions adopted at the May meeting and of the club, and for kindness shown J. Harrison Dick's widow.

A letter was read from W. J. Stewart, thanking the club for its remembrance during his recent illness. A letter of good will from J. A. Shaw was read, written from Toronto, Canada, where he had made a stop en route to California. A letter was read from F. E. Gunnison, fuel administrator of Kings county, N. Y. (Brooklyn), conveying the recent orders of the New York state fuel administration. It follows: "No greenhouse, either private or commercial, is to be allowed to burn for any purpose, any domestic size anthracite (coal). Whenever any greenhouse has on hand any domestic size anthracite, please require them to report same to you with the understanding that, provided they have no other coal on hand, they be allowed to use sufficient of such domestic size anthracite to tide them over until they can arrange to substitute bituminous or steam size anthracite coal." The communication was dated November 5.

A letter was read from Geo. de B. Greene, chairman of the advisory trades committee on Fourth Liberty Loan, conveying his thanks, and those of Benjamin Strong, chairman of the section, for the "remarkable work" of the club's committee in the Loan drive.

EXHIBITS.

Charles H. Totty, Madison, N. J., again exhibited a vase of his new pink rose, Premier. The more that one sees of this rose, the more favorable is the impression gained of it. Thus, so early in the season, it is making four-foot stems; the buds are large and firm, the foliage, luxurious. This scored 91 points, and was awarded a preliminary certificate.

H. J. Anderson, representing A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., exhibited for his firm, an excellent collection of single and pompon chrysanthemums, noteworthy being Mrs. Elizabeth Firestone. Other varieties were: Barbara Davis, a large commercial, pink flower; Western Beauty, rose-pink pompon; Quinola, yellow pompon; Delphine Dodge, light pink pompon; Donald, pompon; Hilda, Canning, pompon; Little Gem, pompon; Eugene Langulot; Jane Ingalls; Dusky Maid; Golden West, pompon; Lucille Noble, pompon; Yellow anemone seedling; Peggy Bulkley, single; Seedling No. 5; Seedling from Western Beauty; Seedling No. 237, crimson; Romaine Warren, pink; Frank Wilcox; Kattwood, awarded a silver medal for the collection.

Roman J. Irwin exhibited a yellow sport of chrysanthemum, William Turner, grown by R. L. Dunn, St. Catharines, Ont. This scored 85 points, and was awarded a preliminary certificate.

OFFICERS NOMINATED.

The nominating committee presented the following names for officers of the club for 1919, to be voted on at the December meeting: For president—Chas. Schenck, (present incumbent), John Canning and Philip F. Kessler. For vice-president—P. W. Popp, (present incumbent), Emil Schloss and J. G. Esler. For treasurer—William C. Rickards, (present incumbent), Thos B. DeForest and A. T. Bunyard. For trustees, three to be elected—P. J. Smith, E. C. Vick, W. R. Pierson, Max. Schling, Percy B. Rigby, and A. T. De La Mare. The nominating committee consisted of Walter B. Sheridan, Eugene Dailledouze and W. A. Manda.

Clarence Ankers, Rockville Center, N. Y., was proposed for membership, and Arthur J. Radia, New York, was elected a member of the club. The death of Ralph M. Ward was announced.

Chairman P. F. Kessler, of the house committee, provided excellent refreshments, the turkey and cranberries in particular.

Captain Moreau, of United States Army, stationed at Camp Mills, came to the meeting with his friend, A. F. Miller, and made pleasing remarks. He has been in charge of the horticultural features at the camp. A. F. Miller, C. H. Totty and other florists, contributed plants during the growing season.

MARKET HOLDS FAIRLY FIRM.

Business is holding up well, and under the circumstances, cleans up the market fairly well. The supply is large and is fully able to satisfy all immediate demands upon it. Chrysanthemums are in a heavy supply and among others includes many choice blooms. The pompon supply is excellent. Roses are fairly plentiful, while carnations are in a fair allotment. Gas are again in the market. The Easter lily supply has let up somewhat during the past week and at the time of this writing but few are available. Sweet peas are becoming more plentiful than they were during the past fortnight. Single violets meet with a fair market.

Lily of the valley sells slowly.

Resolutions on Late Admiral Ward.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society has passed the following resolutions on the death of the late Admiral Aaron Ward:

Whereas, since the last session of the executive committee of the American Rose Society, our friend and counselor, Admiral Aaron Ward, has passed into the "Great Beyond," and

Whereas, we feel keenly the loss of his wise counsel in the work of the society, where his keen love of roses and his thorough knowledge of their culture, both in this country and abroad, made his membership in this committee and in the society of inestimable value; therefore, be it

Resolved, that we express to Mrs. Ward and family our sense of loss, our deep sympathy for them in their bereavement, and our appreciation of the rare quality of the character of Admiral Ward; and be it further

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent Mrs. Ward, a copy spread on the minutes of the society, and copies inserted in the horticultural press.

Charles R. Miller.

Charles R. Miller, who had been in the employ of Walter F. Sheridan, wholesale florist of 133 West 23rd street, New York, for the past 20 years, died November 9, at his home in Flushing, after a very short illness of pneumonia, age 49 years. He had been in poor health for more than a year, but had kept at work up to a day or two previous to his death. He was born and reared in New York. Previous to going with Mr. Sheridan, he had worked for Charles Thorley, also for Thomas Young, Jr. He was well known in the trade of New York as a quiet and unassuming man. He is survived by a widow and five children. A. F. F.

Albertus N. Clark.

Albertus N. Clark, one of the oldest seedsmen of Connecticut, died at his home in Milford, October 31, age 74 years. Directly after his discharge from the army, in 1864, Mr. Clark went into the seed business and for 50 consecutive years solicited orders from his customers and grew on his own farm a large part of the seeds to sell them, his specialty being sweet corn. A little over two years ago, on account of failing health, he sold his farm and retired from active business. He is survived by his wife, a son, Harry W. Clark, of Milford, and a daughter, Mrs. A. N. Walker, of Hinsdale, Ill.

Henry Gaethje, Jr.

Henry Gaethje, Jr., well-known florist of Rock Island, Ill., died at his home in that city, November 7, of pneumonia, age 34 years. He had been ill but one week. The deceased was born in Moline but moved to Rock Island at a very early age, where he attended the public schools and later became associated in the florist business with his father. He is survived by a widow and two sons, his parents, one sister and one brother.

Du Bruz English.

Du Bruz English, well known to the seed trade of the United States as one of the largest growers of vegetables for market with hundreds of acres under cultivation, died at his home, Mt. Olive, N. C., November 4, of pneumonia, following an illness of 10 days. The deceased was also one of the largest shippers of holly in this country and his death will be regretted by a wide circle of friends.

IN Holland, perhaps the ex-kaizer of Germany may find a new keizer's kroom.

EUROPEAN papers record the death of Pierre Guillot, the well known rosarian, in his sixty-third year.

A DUTCH house writes: "Flowers should sell at high prices next spring. Workers earn high wages, and under those conditions flowers sold well all over Europe."

ADVICES from Washington are to the effect that the embargo on building materials has been lifted. This, we understand, applies to greenhouse building as well as other lines.

POINSETTIAS with three branches are increasing in favor for pots and pans and this method of growing permits of a great saving in the number of plants employed. This saving in plants should likewise apply under bench culture in the production of bracts for cutting.

National Publicity for Flowers.

Judging from the clippings of advertisements coming into our promotion bureau, the trade is not using our slogan, "Say It With Flowers," to nearly the extent expected. A little thought to the fact that this slogan is featured in all our magazine advertisements should determine the advisability of using it as widely as possible—in all advertising, or stationery, boxes, parcels, and wherever it can be intruded. While it is not absolutely necessary that the line conforms to the design of the one used in all bureau publicity printers, of course, being able to provide a bold setting for any purpose, still as the public is now quite accustomed to seeing it in our own style, it would be better to get a line electrotype from the bureau, or have one made especially. We can supply electrotypes of lines 1½-in., 2-in., 6-in., and 9-in. long, carrying all these sizes in stock for immediate despatch on receipt of orders.

In addition to the magazine advertising already arranged for November and December, the programme for January and February embraces a list of 27 national magazines, which are to carry a series of advertisements featuring the slogan in connection with special days and seasons. In 18 of these magazines, an advertisement will appear twice, and nine of them three times. The combined circulation of these magazines is roughly estimated to be in the neighborhood of 10,000,000 copies, and it must be remembered that this field is to be gone over twice, and 40 per cent of it three times. With all this publicity, our slogan as a trade mark will have a value almost incalculable, and florists may and ought to use it as much as possible.

The list of magazines is as follows: Atlantic, Red Book, American Magazine, Century, Cosmopolitan, Everybody's, Harper's Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, Metropolitan, Munsey's Magazine, Popular Science Monthly, Review of Reviews, Scribner's Magazine, Vanity Fair, Vogue, Harper's Bazaar, World's Work, Sunset, Argosy Combination, Collier's Weekly, Christian Science Monitor, Independent, Leslie's Weekly, Life, Literary Digest, Outlook, and Scientific American.

It is now almost a year since our publicity campaign started with an appeal for subscriptions. We aimed to raise a fund of $50,000, but if our object is to be attained, we must raise about $5,000 more before the close of the year. Shall we do it? If the florists who have not yet subscribed will give our project the consideration it deserves, we shall. As has been said many times before, this is not work for the benefit of any florist; it is for all in the trade, collectively. One man cannot get more than another, our policy of using journals of national circulation insuring against this. The larger the city, the larger the number of florists, of course, so the benefit is most equitably distributed. And it may be said, without fear of contradiction, that the campaign for the year 1918 has resulted in a complete stabilization of business despite most adverse conditions. It has increased the demand for flowers very considerably; it has built up business for special flower days, and has caused the public very largely to look upon flowers and plants in a new light, as subjects highly suitable for gifts.

As "drives" for the attainment of important objects are the fashion today, why not start one by yourself, sending in a subscription to the fund, if you have not already done so? In your own community you have brother florists; why not make a little drive and send in a community subscription? You would feel the better for it.

Remember, all subscriptions are published. JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

Trade Paper's Proper Place.

There is too much good reading in the trade paper to pass over it hastily. Take it home with you and read it while sitting in your easy chair. Spend the evening after reading your daily paper in thinking over your profession with the help of your trade papers. Too many florists, especially the busy retailer, receives his trade paper with his mail, gives it one glance and that ends it.

Now, instead of that, a wise owl said to me one day: "Do not look at your trade paper during your business hours; take it home, and give it a little more time than usual." Ever since that I thought I learned a lesson; I did take it home, and to my surprise, I can state that many a pleasant evening I have spent by digging deeply into the resources of our trade papers, and many a dollar I have made by studying these papers and gaining more knowledge of my profession. In the advertisements, as well as the write-ups, there is a key that can make you ring up sales a great deal more often than you have any idea of. Since that time I have been taking my trade papers home, and feel very much disappointed when they do not show up promptly. Try it and convince yourself. ALBERT POCHOLON.

MARKET CONDITIONS UNCHANGED.

There is not much of a change to report as to market conditions and business for the week ending October 9. There is a good supply of most stock and the demand is still brisk enough to keep up a healthy condition. Chrysanthemums in all shades, form and sizes are now available and used to good advantage in making up as well as window displays. Excellent stock was the rule up to now. The demand for roses and carnations is still ahead of the supply. Greens are not over plentiful and command good prices. Some stevia is coming in, but it is not open any too far.

CLUB MEETING.

The mass meeting of the trade, called for November 7 by the florists' club, was very slimly attended, due no doubt to the previous peace report, which caused a half-holiday, plus a noisy commotion. As it was chrysanthemum night, and growers were requested to bring one flower of each variety in bloom, there was a fair display of all large, as well as spray varieties. Nic. Zweifel read a well prepared paper on the cultivation of chrysanthemums from the time the cutting is made till the flowers are ready for the market. One of the main points emphasized was to discard old varieties, which had outlived their days, and grow something more up to date. In discussing the paper, the trouble with the different kinds of insects and their eradication proved quite interesting.

The committee, consisting of Wm. Zimmermann, Fred Holton and C. C. Pollworth, who worked out all the Liberty Loans were on hand to explain the present campaign of raising the "Heap the Hat" fund. Due to the slim attendance, they did not begin actual work at that time.

James Livingstone exhibited a large single seedling of a rich yellow shade, in form similar to the Mrs. Sanders daisy, which made a hit. The C. C. Pollworth Co. had a white seedling, similar in form and size to that of Mr. Livingstone's. They also exhibited well grown flowers of all commercial varieties now in bloom. Others who had well finished blooms were: Holton & Hunkel Co., Gust Pohl, Kamp & Spinti, Otto Seytlicher & Sons and the Heitman-Oestreicher Co.

Out-of-town visitors at the meeting were Herm Staeps, Elm Grove, and Otto Sylvester, Sr., Oconomowoc.

NOTES.

The best news, bar none, was the peace report, which reached here November 11, at 2:45 a. m. Needless to say the town went wild, and it was impossible to get anybody to work, so it resulted in a holiday. Those that opened shop in the morning, did not stay longer than noon. It is with a sigh of relief that after more than four years of bloodshed, it has come to an end for humanity's sake.

Mr. Albert, foreman for J. J. Soper, Rockford, Ill., was in town for a couple of days purchasing plants for the coming Christmas trade.

CLUB MEETING.

Nominations for the annual election to be held on December 5, and an exhibition of chrysanthemums, were the principal features at the November meeting of the florists' club. The members who will run for office on the two tickets at the December election are: Regular ticket—For president, William Newport; for vice-president, R. W. Bilson; for secretary-treasurer, Robert Davidson; for trustees, two years, George E. Nagengast, Jr., H. E. Eberhart, and Joseph Traudt. Opposition ticket—For president, James Snyder, for vice-president, William M. Quinn; for secretary-treasurer, Robert Davidson; for trustees, two years, Philip Ulrich, Joseph Traudt, and Howard L. Menand. Frederick A. Danker, chairman of the show committee, reported on the exhibit of the evening, calling attention to the fact that growers in this vicinity, as well as A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., and F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y., had responded to requests made for blooms. The displays included many new varieties and colors from the small anemones to the large incurved blooms. One of the most striking of the exhibits was one of William Turner, a large white, incurved variety, grown by Samuel Goldring, employed by George Person of Catskill. It attracted unusual attention on account of its size and beauty. President William Newport named a committee of four retailers to take up the matter of advertising Thanksgiving flowers in the local papers. The committee is made up of Fred A. Danker, Edward P. Tracey, James Lascaris, and Byron C. Holmes. These men will collect a fund from the local retailers and make contracts with the newspapers for some good display publicity. Following the regular meeting, James Snyder was named auctioneer to sell the blooms shown at the exhibit. These were bid in by the retailers, and the sum of $35 was added to the club treasury.

NOTES.

The annual exhibition of chrysanthemums by the park department was opened in the lake house, Washington park, November 10, and will be continued for one week. Superintendent Philip Bender announced that the exhibit this year will contain 325 varieties, 12 of which will be new. The new varieties include Betsy Ross, Mrs. J. Gibson, William Wait, Madison, November Glow, Naponee, and Joan of Arc.

The retailers report that the business in funeral designs during the month of October broke all records in their recollection. The heavy demand was due to the large number of deaths in the city and vicinity following influenza. The call for designs was insistent and compelled many of the florists to get extra help, where they could, and to work hours overtime.

R. D.

Rochester, N. Y.

HEAVY DEMAND FALLS OFF.

Business has naturally fallen off since the passing of the influenza epidemic, although there is a great amount of funeral work at present. Flowers are much more plentiful and have dropped in price. The chrysanthemum supply is greatly improved, among the leading offerings being Margie, Touset, Turner, Chieftain and Ivory. Carnations are excellent and there are good roses and violets. Pompons are plentiful and of good quality. Snapdragons are still to be had. The peace celebration made a little extra business in the way of transient trade, and only a few of the larger stores closed for the afternoon.

NOTES.

J. B. Keller Sons had a most inviting display during the week, bronze, plush draped pedestals supporting jardinières of bronze, yellow and white pompons. Baskets and other small receptacles occupied the foreground.

Frank Peartree has resigned his position with Geo. T. Boucher and is now manager of the Rosery Flower Shop, in the absence of the owner, Edwin Kendrick, who also conducts a store in Oswego, N. Y.

H. P. Neun is producing some excellent plants of pompons in various colors. These are attractively arranged in his windows. Crotons are also a feature here.

George Boucher will hold a chrysanthemum show at his store, November 11-16, which promises to be one of the finest displays of its kind ever seen in this city.

The city fuel administrator has notified local florists that they will be permitted an unlimited supply of soft coal during the coming winter.

George Kramer is interesting in remodeling the Hart & Vick range, formerly the Salter Greenhouses at Fairport.

Louis Colletos is showing excellent vases of White and Yellow Turner in the window at his Clinton avenue store. Salter Bros. are making a specialty of helichrysum and gypsophila.

H. E. Wilson is cutting excellent chrysanthemums and pompons.

CHESTER.

Boston.

STOCK GOOD AND PROSPECTS EXCELLENT.

Business is brisk and stock is plentiful and selling at reasonable prices. Flowers never looked so good and prospects are very bright for a good Thanksgiving day's business. Chrysanthemums are very plentiful and they sell at very fair prices. Carnations are strong and good, the best moving at $3 a hundred. Roses are very cheap as the demand is for chrysanthemums at present. Violets, pansies and sweet peas are excellent and sell for a good figure. Easter and calla lilies are in great demand and bring 12½ and 15 cents each. Single pink and white bouvardia is still popular; which makes up in attractive baskets for social functions.

NOTES.

Herbert Sloane severed his connection with the New England Floral Supply Co., and will devote his entire time to his store in Somerville and his grower at the market.

B. McGinty, salesman at the co-operative market, is receiving daily shipments of Easter lilies, carnations, and roses, which sell easily at good figures.

Harry Ward is receiving large shipments of carnations from the Roper estate, including Benora, Matchless, Pink Delight, and Roper seedlings.

J. M. Ward, of Peabody, is shipping to market a good assortment of cyclamens, yellow and Garza chrysanthemum plants and ferns.

Wm. McAlpine has just returned from a week's hunting trip at Green Harbor, where he was very successful with wild ducks.

B. A. Sydnor & Co. continue with good business and are satisfied with the outlook for the holiday trade.

Welch Bros. Co. reports good business and out-of-town trade never was better.

S. K. G.

Kansas City, Mo.

DEMAND WEAKENS SOMEWHAT.

Business fell off slightly during the past week due principally to the decrease in funeral work, which was a large item during October. Chrysanthemums are here in good quantity and the quality was never better, good prices being the result. Russell, Ophelia and Columbia roses are showing fine form and the same is true of carnations. Pompons made a great showing during the past week. Chrysanthemum plants are also very popular with the trade.

NOTES.

A stray deer visited the establishment of the Peterson Floral Co., November 10, and before the force could recover from their surprise, it broke through a large show window and did considerable other damage.

LARGE SUPPLY LOWERS PRICES.

The market hit the high places the past week, but towards the end of the week, on account of a closing order, the bottom dropped out of prices. Supply of stock has been heavy. Chrysanthemums have been the leaders, mostly of a superior quality. Pompons are in big supply and sell well. Roses of all kinds have been plentiful and sell at good figures. Carnations are improving but the supply is limited. Sweet peas are also in limited supply, but bring a big price. Violets still need cool weather to make them right. The supply was short the past week. Lilies are very scarce. In greens the market is well taken care of.

NOTES.

The city health department, November 9, put into effect a rigid closing order, affecting all retail establishments, and this caused quite a bit of demoralization. A later amendment allowed flower stores to be open to fill their phone orders.

Nassau County Horticultural Society.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society added another success to its creditable floral and vegetable displays October 31-November 1, when the fourteenth annual chrysanthemum show was held at Pembroke hall, Glen Cove,

N. Y. The exhibition was divided into 41 classes, these covering chrysanthemum plants, cut chrysanthemums, single and hardy chrysanthemums, roses, carnations, violets, decorative work, vegetables and plants. The chief exhibitors and prize winners in the chrysanthemum classes were Captain J. R. DeLamar, Percy Chubb, Mrs. Arthur Gibb, Mrs. Charles F. Cartledge, and Mrs. Payne Whitney. Percy Chubb, Captain DeLamar and Mrs. Whitney shared alike in the total number of awards—twelve each. The Chubb exhibits as in previous years captured the largest number of first prizes—10 in all, and two seconds, another evidence of the skill of Robert Jones. Mrs. Whitney won six firsts and six seconds, while Captain DeLamar received five firsts and seven seconds.

EVERYONE HAPPY OVER PEACE NEWS.

The most welcome news ever received here was that of November 11 announcing the signing of the armistice, which sent the whole city wild. Business was practically at a standstill everywhere and nearly all the wholesale and retail stores closed for the day at about noon, when nobody cared whether they did any more business or not. It was almost impossible to get express shipments to the depots from the wholesale houses, owing to the fact that the drivers refused to work and joined in the big celebration. Some difficulty was experienced in getting the packages aboard the trains after they reached the stations, owing to the absence of many of the regular employees who joined the drivers in celebrating the day. The wild celebration that had raged since the early morning hours of Monday ended in hysteria in the early hours of Tuesday. Before midnight good-natured rowdism had become general. Thousands of men and women had their hats knocked from their heads and trampled to pieces beneath the feet of the hilarious multitude. The celebration last Thursday was a drop in the bucket to that of Monday, November 11 which will be remembered forever. Over a million hilarious people jammed their way through the loop. Among whom were a great many florists in both the retail and wholesale trade who acted like a bunch of school kids just let loose for a vacation. The surprising part of the whole affair was that everyone was on the job the next day bright and early, none the worse for wear after the strenuous experience they went through. Business is pretty good at this writing, especially in the shipping line, and while there is plenty of stock to go around, some expect to experience a clean-up now that the gigantic war is about at an end. The outlook for Thanksgiving is bright, and with favorable weather a good clean-up in all lines should be the result. Some growers say that chrysanthemums will not be as plentiful as last year, owing to the warm weather of the past few weeks, but the supply of pompons will be fairly large. Roses in all varieties should clean up early and so ought carnations, which do not promise to be in any great over-supply. Violets, orchids, lily of the valley, gardenias, stevia, sweet peas, lilies, callas, calendulas, daisies, snapdragons and Paper White narcissus will be among the offerings, together with mignonette and a few other items not already mentioned. From present indications the supply of stock in general will not be as heavy as last year, so the wise buyer will do well to order early so as to avoid disappointment. Look over the advertisements in this week's issue of THE AMERICAN FLORIST and place your order immediately. The Thanksgiving demand should be a "bumdinger" this year, so be prepared to handle all the business that may come your way. Play safe and order right now. Today. Prices will not be any cheaper than those advertised now, but are likely to advance before the big day draws near.

NOTES.

Allie Zech, of Zech & Mann, is busy as a bee this week on the National War Work campaign conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic War Council, the Jewish Relief Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association, and the Salvation Army, to carry on the great work of supplying our fighting forces with entertainment, recreation, reading rooms, etc.—in fact, "a bit of home within the camp," and much appreciated comforts on the firing line. He is chairman of the florists' division, a job he accepted the last minute owing to the absence of volunteers for the worthy cause. The trade is expected to donate at least $12,500 for this worthy cause, so everyone might as well dig now and help make up this quota. Mr. Zech is entitled to the support of everyone on this occasion and those who have not already come across through the florists' division should do so immediately. The trade has never fallen down yet and it cannot possibly afford to do so now.

John Hoerber, son of John Hoerber, one of the proprietors of Hoerber Bros.' wholesale business, was gassed in France recently and is now recovering in one of the base hospitals.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. will have a good supply of stock of all kinds for Thanksgiving, particularly roses, of which it is now cutting exceptionally fancy stock. A dove of peace is perched on the flag pole extending over the sidewalk in East Randolph street, from the supply department, which is the work of T. E. Waters, who could not resist the opportunity of demonstrating his patriotism over the welcome tidings received this week from the war-torn battlefields of Europe.

John Michelsen, of the E. C. Amling Co., and Henry Meyer, visited the growers at Richmond, Ind., this week. They found the E. G. Hill Co.'s new rose, Premier, in the best of condition and looking as promising as ever. This variety will be grown quite extensively by the Amling Co.'s growers next season.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. are handling a good supply of all seasonable stock and are now booking orders for Thanksgiving. Mr. Pyfer is looking for a shortage of carnations on the occasion notwithstanding that his firm will be pretty well fixed on this item.

Kennicott Bros. Co. report a brisk demand for Bonnafton, which it is featuring in quantity as in other years. The shipping trade is heavy at this establishment and is showing a steady increase right along.

Frank C. Goodman, of Mason City, Ia., was here this week buying stock for his fall trade. He reports business as good and is enthusiastic over the outlook for the coming winter.

Vaughan's Seed Store, while still awaiting belated Dutch shipments, has moved a good many wholesale lots by putting in 14 hours a day. They report stocks nearly exhausted.

Draft boards have been ordered to stop classifying men under 19 or over 36 years, and to withhold questionnaires for such registrants not already sent out. It was said officially at the provost marshal general's office that registrants of 18 and from 37 to 46 years old who have received questionnaires need not fill them out.

Joseph Foerster, of Kyle & Foerster, and family joined in the big peace celebration that started on the north side near where he lived early Monday morning, November 11. After closing the store he took in the sights in the loop in the evening but admitted that he was all in when he quit for the day.

The A. L. Randall Co. will have a large quantity of pompons to offer for Thanksgiving in addition to its usual

Mention the American Florist when writing

Cancellation of all draft calls and inductions November 11 practically has nullified the famous "work-or-fight" order promulgated last summer and under which thousands of men flocked to essential industry on pain of immediate induction, though local boards have been ordered to continue classifying after physical examination men between 19 and 36. The work-or-fight order falls by reason of the fact that the only penalty attached was that of being placed in class 1. With calls stopped the government has no power to penalize the nonessential employment. The cessation of the draft calls found the work of classifying all registrants under the 18 to 45 year extended limits more than 60 per cent complete in the United States and entirely complete in some states and localities. The stopping of the calls does not relieve any delinquent who has failed to obey draft orders from the penalties which are attached under the law. A single order from the general staff would suffice to start another stream of men flowing into the cantonments and bring the work-or-fight and all other war-time requirements back into force.

The recent opening of the chrysanthemum show at the Garfield park conservatory marked one of the finest floral displays seen there since the head gardener A. Koch took charge about seven years ago. There were 356 varieties, in all nearly 5,000 specimens, representing the numerous types from the largest bush plants to single flowering specimens. At the entrance was a special exhibit of new hybrid winter-flowering tuberous begonias. Every plant and flower in the large enclosure reflected the careful culture that has gained for Mr. Koch an enviable reputation throughout the country.

Albert Fuchs, formerly well-known as a florist on the north side, and at present a wealthy real estate operator, who some time ago came under federal observation for offering a reward to anyone who could prove German officers were guilty of ordering or committing atrocities, celebrated the recent peace festivities. At the request of his neighbors, and with the assistance of two policemen, who helped him keep a good peace, Albert carried the American flag placed in his hands, and marched up and down, with occasional reminders not to lag.

All lighting restrictions, except where current is generated by domestic sizes of anthracite, were lifted November 12 by Fuel Administrator Garfield until midnight November 18 to permit free illumination for the united war work campaign.

Frank Kral had several large orders for the funeral of ex-alderman Miller this week, which were on display at his store for some time previous to the burial, together with many other pieces sent by rival concerns.

Erne & Co. are looking forward to a brisk Thanksgiving business and will be prepared to handle all the trade that may come their way. Chrysanthemums are a leader here this week.

Peter Reinberg and a party of friends left this week for Bogus Island on a hunting trip. Business at the store is exceptionally good with a brisk out-of-town demand.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co., 1129-31 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Branch Factory: 709 First Ave., New York.

Bassett & Washburn will not have many chrysanthemums to offer for Thanksgiving this year, owing to the fact that they have already cut practically their entire crop. Mr. Washburn says that their chrysanthemums brought higher prices than ever before this season, owing to the exceedingly brisk demand, which cleaned them up as fast as they could be cut.

A. L. Vaughan, of A. L. Vaughan & Co., is back from a business trip to Des Moines, Ia. The outlook for a brisk Thanksgiving business is very bright at this establishment, and from present indications it will have plenty of stock to meet the demand.

Wietor Bros. will be in good crop with chrysanthemums and pompons for Thanksgiving, which they are growing on a large scale again this season. Roses will also be in large supply with them and some good cuts of carnations are in sight.

Miss L. A. Tonner, of O. A. & L. A. Tonner, is in Baxton, Ga., on business connected with her pecan groves located there. This firm will be strong on Bonaffon for Thanksgiving, as well as pompons, particularly Garza and Mrs. Frank Ben.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association offered the first Paper White narcissus to reach this market this season, November 9. Fancy mignonette is included among the complete line of offerings at this establishment.

J. A. Budlong is cutting roses in quantity which will be in good crop with them for Thanksgiving. Particularly fine Columbia and Mrs. Chas. Russell are included in the shipments not to mention splendid looking Champ Weiland.

Ed. Vilter is the latest addition to the force at the Chicago Flower Growers' Association store.

George Zarbock has taken a position in Zech & Mann's shipping department.

Chicago Florists' Club.

The regular meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club was held at the Hotel Randolph, November 7, when the nomination of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: For president, A. J. Zech and George Wieland; vice-president, Walter Amling; secretary, A. T. Pyfer; treasurer, Otto H. Amling; director, Fred Lautenschlager.

Alfred Berlin, River Forest, was elected to membership and the following applications were read: Grant Wiffin, Henry D. Neve and X. Wotjewicz, Des Plaines.

A letter from Elliott H. Goodwin, general secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, was read, which requested the florists to form a war service executive committee of the United States to deal with the government on questions of fuel supply, etc., and, with this idea in mind, preparatory to a general meeting of representatives of the industry to be held in Washington at a later date, appoint one or two representatives of the entire local trade to represent it then at a date to be announced later. August Poehlmann was selected by the club to represent and George Asmus, who expects to be present, was requested to act for him if he was unable to attend. A copy of this letter was sent by the Chamber to two florists in each city so that the proper representation may be had at the Washington meeting.

Arthur A. Craig read a very interesting paper on the suggestions to a committee on a working plan to overcome our business grievances, which fully cover the object and the cause. Otto H. Amling read a valuable article on costs. Both subjects were so interesting that they will be given further consideration at the December meeting and the writers received a rising vote of thanks for the splendid manner in which they handled them. J. C. Vaughan also received a rising vote of thanks for the interest he took in the coal situation for the trade which had considerable bearing on the recent 100 per cent fuel order issued.

November 11-18 the people of the United States will be asked to raise $170,500,000 in the National War Work campaign conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic War Council, the Jewish Relief Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association and the Salvation Army, to carry on the great work of supplying our fighting forces with entertainment, recreation, reading rooms, etc.—in fact, "a bit of home within the camp," and much appreciated comforts on the firing line. The florists' quota is $12,500, which must be realized, so everyone might as well make up their minds to contribute all they possibly can immediately, if they have not already done so, for the campaign closes next Monday. Fred Lautenschlager who so successfully handled the recent Liberty Bond drive for the trade, was unable to accept the chairmanship on this occasion, which is being handled by Alvin J. Zech. Mr. Zech accepted the job at the last minute and requests the support of all so that the trade may subscribe its full quota.

Paul Klingsporn, chairman of the entertainment committee for the visiting florists to the St. Louis convention, presented his final report.

T. E. Waters, chairman of the good-of-the-club committee, had the meeting room decorated with the national colors. It was decided to hold a victory banquet in the near future, which will be in the nature of a Dutch luncheon. The date will be announced soon.

THE LEO NIESSEN CO., 1201 Race St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PRICES BETTER THAN NORMAL.

The tone of the market has been better this week. Stock in some lines, notably roses, has shortened up considerably. It is generally the high tide period for the chrysanthemums, but in spite of the predictions that there would be an overproduction, the market has at no time been heavily stocked and prices have averaged about one-third higher than normal for the season. It is predicted by good judges of the market that the crop will hardly last until Thanksgiving day, as all varieties are in fully a week earlier than last year. Carnations are increasing in volume and quality and hold their own as to price. It is even predicted that they will be selling as high as $8 the coming week. The supply of roses is about half that of last week. Growers, as a rule, try to keep out of the chrysanthemum competition, but the recent hot weather brought them in by the thousands in spite of all they could do to hold them back. American Beauties are not any too plentiful, they being pinched to be in crop for Thanksgiving and the holidays. Easter lilies are about even with the demand. There are also a few callas. Dahlias hang on, flowers from the protected buds. These are not good, however, and even if they were, they would not sell, for as one dealer put it, "the people are now tired of them." Sweet peas are coming strong and they will be a great factor this season. Cattleyas are quite plentiful at buyers' prices in quantity lots. Violets, single and double, are more than equal to the demand. Snapdragon is a favorite and is seen in all the stocks. Stevia will soon be in and will have a good run, as it is always popular. All kinds of green goods are plentiful. There is considerable speculation as to the future of the market from Thanksgiving on. With chrysanthemums out of the way, a steadily decreasing supply of Easter lilies, and a negligible quantity of French and Dutch bulb stock, the standards will then be orchids, roses, carnations, sweet peas, snapdragons, violets, freesia, callendulas, lupins and callas. There will also be a variety of small flowers in bunches, such as pansies, daisies, et-cum-nots, and the like. One prominent wholesaler gave it as his opinion, that if the close of the war made any appreciable gain in the demand over that of last winter, the range of prices would be considerably higher.

November 11.—The week opened with a fair stock of flowers, but a light demand. The good news from the other side caused such excitement that everybody left off to celebrate. All the large stores in every line were closed and a glorious holiday was the result. No such intense patriotic enthusiasm was ever before seen in this city.

NOTES.

C. U. Luggitt, a large dealer in growers' plant stock, reports that since the new coal ruling went into effect there has been a great demand for all kinds of greenhouse forcing plants. Snapdragon is particularly active, but there are very few young plants on the market. Many houses are being planted with candytuft and sweet alyssum, which should make good catch crops. Pansy plants are also in demand for this purpose. Rooted geranium cuttings are also selling ahead of the supply, there being none in sight until after the first of the year.

While the local demand is of course a great factor in the flower market, the out-of-town shipping trade, covering a radius of over 1,000 miles, is growing rapidly. One large firm frequently sends out daily over 100 packages by parcel post, many of which reach the maximum limit as to size. This service has been found very efficient, particularly on direct routes. They are all sent special delivery, which are acceptable at all railroad stations a half hour before train time. This appears to be the most direct service possible.

Now that florists are allowed to have 100 per cent of certain grades of coal, there is no doubt that the rose growers will run all their houses, and the production in this line should almost equal that of last year. It is estimated that there are not as many carnations by at least 25 per cent as were grown last season. Growers should give this stock their best attention, as all high grade flowers will command top prices during the balance of the season.

Leonard Rueber died in Lansdowne, Pa., October 31, aged 70 years. The deceased was well known to the trade. He was the maker up when Henry A. Dreer sold flowers at retail in connection with the seed business over forty years ago. He was a decorator for Hugh Graham for many years and later went into business for himself at Twentieth street and Fairmount avenue, where he carried on jobbing gardening.

I. Jacobs, 605 Broadway, Camden, has purchased the Goosetree Greenhouses at Magnolia, N. J. Herman Weber is in charge. The products will be used to supply his Broadway store. Peter Dilhousen, late of Habermehl's, is in charge of the store. It is stated that with only four hands, this establishment turned out over $9,000 worth of funeral work during the month of October, when the epidemic was at its height.

Jos. N. King, of Norristown, Pa., was in town last week taking a look over the market, of which he is a frequent visitor. His business, that of a retail florist, comes pretty near to being one of the oldest in the state, being established by his father in 1817, running continuously for 71 years, and still going strong. Mr. King is also an accomplished musician and has written several sacred and popular patriotic songs.

The Robert Craig Co. is very busy at this time getting out holiday orders, most customers taking their plants a month ahead of time, maturing them in their own houses, or the storemen having them finished by their local growers. This avoids all delays incident to cold weather and poor express service.

The Leo Niessen Co. reports a much better demand this week than last, and expects a constantly increasing business from this time on. Roses, chrysanthemums and a good supply of carnations were features here.

The Jos. Heacock Co. expresses great satisfaction with the new coal regulations which will allow a 100 per cent production at their Roelfs rose ranges. The plants are just now a bit off crop, but coming strong.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are very busy trying to keep ahead of their orders for Christmas goods. Florists are alive to the fact that now is the time to order and avoid a repetition of the delays of last season.

At Joseph G. Neidinger's there is an extra force making up Christmas wreaths and other holiday stock. Mr. Neidinger is in the hospital recovering nicely from the effects of his operation.

Manager Miller, of the Philadelphia Wholesale Florists' Exchange, finds business a great improvement over that of a week ago. Excellent roses are the leading stock.

Edward Reid finds chrysanthemums on the short side. Roses in variety are a feature. Carnations are also a quantity stock. An excellent shipping trade is reported.

Miss Mary Baker is a good scout for Uncle Sam, she already having secured two good sized subscriptions for the fifth Liberty Loan.

BIG SUPPLY CHRYSANTHEMUMS AND ROSES.

There has been but little change in the condition of the market since our last notes were written. Heavy supplies of chrysanthemums and roses continue to arrive. The city's death rate has fallen, and consequently there is a marked decrease in the demand for funeral stock. Although the movement is slow, there seems to be an improvement in the general business of the retail stores, prices on special stock seeming to be a little firmer than they were during the weeks when the epidemic raged. Special Opheila roses are selling up to $12 per 100, but it is only the best stock that brings that price. Special cattleyas are moving at the rate of $50 and $60 per 100; the best carnations at $5 per 100. Election day has always been considered a poor day for business and this year was no exception. The celebration of the fake peace news in a wild orgy, discreditable to the city, upset business for that day. The two flower shows that were running during the past week were well attended, showing that even amid the tumult of war and politics, the people have not lost their interest in flowers.

November 11.—Nobody expects to do much business today for a genuine peace celebration is on, and it is well worth the loss of a day's business. There was considerable buying this morning, as the retailers must stock up on Monday. There is but little change in prices from our quotations of November 9, excepting in American Beauty roses, which have gone up. The horse show opened today, and although it is not what it used to be, it should to some extent improve the flower market for this week. A number of society weddings are announced for this week, and on account of the peace news, there should be some entertainments calling for flowers. But let us not forget that the sum of at least $170,500,000 is to be raised for our soldiers and sailors, to add to their comfort and happiness, to help them in their temptations and difficulties, during the period which must elapse until they are safe home again. The purpose for which this money is to be used, and the methods whereby it is to be spent, have been approved by the government. The president of the United States has requested that in this campaign a united effort be made by the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the National Catholic War Council, the Jewish Welfare Board, the Salvation Army, the War Camp Community Service and the American Library Association. We may add that Dr. Garfield has announced that on account of the influenza disabling so many miners, there is serious danger of coal strikes. Business will not snap back all at once to what it was before the war; there is at least a year of economy and watchfulness ahead.

In the meantime, God bless our President, and Pershing, and Foch and Haig, and in the language of Tiny Tim: "God bless us, every one!"

NOTES.

One may well believe that it would help the florist business if more commercial growers would take an interest in their local shows. As these shows, at least in this city, are free to the public, they bring the grower in close touch with thousands of his ultimate customers, for no matter how he disposes of his stock, it eventually reaches the public. Two shows were held in this city during the past week, and to the best of our recollection, putting the two shows mentally together, there were but eight commercial exhibitors. Six of them were from New Jersey, one, A. N. Pierson, Inc., from Cromwell, Conn., and one, Fred Wilshire, grower for John Condon, from Brooklyn. It is not our business, or anybody's business, to be a heart-searcher to find out the motives of these men for exhibiting; the fact remains that they were there with their stock, and in conjunction with a few gardeners from private estates, saved both shows from being pitiful failures. It is preposterous to assume that within the boundaries of this great city, there was only one grower who could exhibit, or that within a radius of 25 miles of the city, and in this state, there were none. One may believe that an exhibit at a show to which the public is admitted free, is the best sort of publicity for a commercial florist. The New Jersey growers who exhibited, Charles H. Totty, Lager & Hurrell, the Julius Roehrs Co., Bobbink & Atkins, W. A. Manda and Joseph A. Manda, deserve credit. If they won prizes, it was because they were on hand with the stock. Particularly to be commended is W. A. Manda. He is not a grower of cut flowers, but he made a very novel and interesting exhibit of foliage plants. Sunday, November 10, was an ideal autumn day, and there was a large attendance at the show of the Horticultural Society of New York in the American Museum of Natural History.

Mayor Hylan has ousted William F. Grell from the office of park commissioner, and appointed as his successor, Philip Berolzheimer, who is treasurer of the Eagle Pencil Company, and chairman of the board of directors of the Public National Bank. Commissioner Berolzheimer was born in Bavaria, his grandfather being a pioneer pencil maker. After the civil war, and this country had enacted a protective tariff, the Berolzhimers came here and started a pencil factory. The commissioner is said to be enthusiastic about music. In 1917, he was appointed a special deputy park commissioner, with jurisdiction over the music in the parks. When asked what his policy would be, he replied: "How can I tell? The only instructions which I received from the mayor were these: 'I desire you to run the park department as you would run your own business, but under no circumstances neglect the park music. Spend no money that you do not have to, but keep the parks in such shape as to be of greatest use to the people.' That is all that I can say for the present."

David Clarke's Sons, Broadway and 75th street, report business improving. In their large show windows, there is a fine display of flowering and foliage plants. In flowering stock, orchids, chrysanthemums and cyclamens are noteworthy, on a background of large palms, ferns, Ficus pandurata and dracaenas.

Roses may come and roses may go, but H. E. Froment, 148 West 28th street, always has a good supply. When he moved over to No. 148, some of the boys thought he was away from the heart of things, but since the Seventh avenue subway was opened, he gets the "first chance."

Malandre Brothers, Broadway and 72d street, report good business. Their store is always stocked with the best the market affords, and all artistically arranged. A Japanese garden is the feature of their show window, appro-riately bordered with chrysanthemums.

The Astoria Florist, Broadway near 77th street, has greatly improved his store, having fitted up the roomy basement, in good style, as a plant department. This store is always well stocked with fine cut flowers and plants.

George D. Nicholas, the popular retailer of Seventh avenue and 123d street, had a great rush of funeral work during the epidemic. He takes a hopeful view for the future of the business.

Clarence Slinn, the violet specialist of West 28th street, is receiving regular shipments of violets, but is not particularly well pleased with the condition of the violet market.

One of the busiest retail stores in the city is that of William H. Long, 412 Columbus avenue, which has a steady run of custom, and "there's a reason."

William Kessler, 113 West 28th street, is receiving an exceptionally fine quality of single violets, that sell well.

The Cathedral Florist, Broadway and 110th street, has two stores in that locality and keeps them well stocked.

Harry Hoffmeier, 2339 Broadway, has added fruit as a side line to his florist business.

The Seed Trade

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C. President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held June, 1919.

WEST HAVEN, CONN.—Watson S. Woodruff is president of the Orange Trust Co., here.

VISITED CHICAGO: A. J. Brown, of the A. J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.; Chas. Johnson, Marietta, Pa.

NEW YORK.—Hollanders report that both DeGraaf and Krelage, noted Dutch bulb concerns, are out of business this year.

The death of Albertus N. Clark, veteran seedsman of Milford, Conn., is recorded in our obituary column this week.

WHY not a December or January seed trade meeting annually, or, better, one every six weeks from November 1 on?

LEONARD H. VAUGHAN, of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, is in New York this week attending the seed trade meetings.

SHIPMENTS for Australia will require new conditions for the English customs. Inquiries should be made of T. Hull, South Ferry building, 44 Whitehawk street, New York.

J. CHAS. McCULLOUGH, of Cincinnati, O., is now starting on the fifty-second year of actual work in the seed business and plans to spend most of the winter in Florida as usual.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade November 13 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.75 per 100 pounds, 25 cents higher than last week.

"HORSE BEANS" is the title of Farmers' Bulletin 969, recently issued by the United States department of agriculture, describing numerous varieties and the advantage of more extensive plantings.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover opened 10 cents lower November 9, closing at $23.30, a drop of 45 cents during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents higher, selling at $6.07½; December, $5.12½; January, $5.20, and May $5.37½.

CHAIRMAN HORACE BOWKER of the Chemical Alliance says that whereas last year the available potash supply for this country aggregated about 32,000 tons, this amount will probably be increased to around 40,000 tons next season.

LAWRENCE, KAN.—In response to the government's call for peach pits to be used in making gas masks, the Barteldes Seed Co., of this city, has donated 52 sacks, which were being held for seed, doubtless one of the largest offerings made in this state.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The H. F. Michell Co. has heard from its missing consignments of Dutch bulbs, which it was feared had gone to the bottom. They left England, October 27, in the hold of the S. S. Skipton Castle, which is expected to arrive at an Atlantic port any day.

Union Set Conditions at Chicago.

Union sets in the Chicago district have turned out very much better than was anticipated in the summer and early fall, according to the United States Government Seed Reporter of November 9. During the harvesting season the crop appeared short. Though the acreage planted this year was much larger than last year, it is estimated that the acreage of sets harvested this year was less than that of last year. The yields, however, were better, averaging on the south side of Chicago about five bushels for each pound of seed sown, and on the north side five and a half to six bushels per pound sown. No survey of total production has been made, but dealers estimate that the production for 1918 is about 80 per cent of that for 1917. The sets were harvested under ideal weather conditions and the quality is excellent.

The active shipping season from growers' to distributors' hands is over. The outside demand is quiet and prices have declined about 25 cents per bushel from those prevailing about 30 days ago. Most of the independent growers having a surplus quantity of sets have sold them and, while a few sets are still being offered, they do not find ready sale.

Present quotations for prompt shipment, based on 32 pounds per bushel, are $2.00 per bushel for yellow; $2.00 to $2.20 for red; and $2.50 to $2.75 for white. Quotations for January shipment are about $2.25 for yellow; $2.40 for red; and $3.25 to $3.50 for white.

Western Seedsmen's Association.

The Western Seedsmen's Association held a conference at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, Mo., November 9. President H. A. Johns opened the meeting with an urgent appeal to all seedsmen to help the government increase food production for 1919 and warned all members to avoid all semblance of profiteering during the coming months. He said that no industry had been more loyal to the government than the seed trade and that he was proud to be identified with it. C. M. Jackman, formerly with Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago and New York, was present and gave a very interesting account of his experiences while confined for many months as a prisoner in Germany. The consensus of opinion among those present was that peace will create a greater demand for foodstuffs than was the case before the war and that with the consequent maintenance of war prices for food, more war gardens will be maintained than ever. An afternoon session was held particularly for those interested in field seeds. This was presided over by Guy Purcell of W. H. Small & Co., Evansville, Ind.

Those in attendance at the conference included: C. C. Andrews, Kansas City, Mo.; F. W. Barteldes and Otto A. Barteldes, Lawrence, Kan.; A. G. Bather, Minneapolis, Minn.; H. S. Burt, Burlington, Ia.; J. T. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; J. R. Condon, Rockford, Ill.; Chester C. Cox, Evansville, Ind.; G. W. Cummings, Sioux City, Ia.; Roy Edwards, Kansas City, Mo.; A. M. Boddington Bankruptcy Dismissed.

The petition in bankruptcy that was filed October 4 against the Arthur T. Boddington Co., New York, mention of which was previously made in these columns, has been dismissed by Judge Knox. Three creditors are in Germany and one is in Belgium. Notices for these were sent to the alien property custodian.

State Seed Laws.

C. E. Kendel, 2010 Ontario street, Cleveland, O., secretary of American Seed Trade Association, has on hand copies of the uniform state seed laws agreed upon by the Association of Official Seed Analysts, the American Seed Trade Association and the Wholesale Grass Seed Dealers' Association at Detroit, Mich., June 21, 1917.

HOLLANDERS during the war sold their German friends many trainloads of diseased potatoes for spot cash, according to a well known Dutch nurseryman.

INFORMATION from Washington, D. C., is to the effect that America's present reserve supplies of foodstuffs, except sugar and rice, will average from two to three times as much as stock on hand a year ago.

Petsal, Supplement of Head Lettuce.

Petsal, which can be grown throughout the entire country and at about half the expense of lettuce, is recommended by the United States department of agriculture as a supplement of the latter, but not a substitute for it. It is said to keep better than lettuce, holds up better in transit and pound for pound, probably contains as much valuable substance as an edible. Petsal is one of the staple ingredients of chop suey, but it is not a cabbage and the unfortunate use of the name Chinese cabbage should not create prejudice against it. As a garnish it is preferable to lettuce as it retains its crispness in flavor as well as appearance. It is grown from seed, attains a height of 12 to 14 inches, and when ready to serve resembles the heart of lettuce.

The accompanying illustration shows the two vegetables in a state of equal freshness, ready to serve as salad. It will be observed by comparison that the heart of lettuce shown at the top does not stand up as crispy nor as firmly as Petsal; nor does the former have the inviting and appetizing appearance clearly noticeable in the latter.

Vegetable and Fruit Markets.

From reports received from the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, shipments are declining gradually, but less rapidly than last year. In potatoes the price movement was irregular with a prevailing weak tone. The demand at shipping points in the west was slow and fair to good in other sections. Some disposition to hold to high prices was reported in Maine, Colorado and the middle west. Minnesota and Wisconsin No. 1 sacked white stock held fairly steady at $1.75-$1.90 per 100 pounds in carlots at Chicago, with a general jobbing range of $2-$2.75, including southern points. Minnesota Red River Ohios weakened steadily, closing 10-15 cents lower than last week. Colorado white stock ranged, sacked, at $1.45-$1.55 cash trackside. Green Mountains were fairly steady at $3-$3.25 per barrel measure in bulk at track. Onion markets continued firm with a slight improvement but no great change in prices. Rochester, N. Y., quoted sacked Yellow Globes at $1.35-$1.40 per 100 pounds. Northampton, Mass., has a strengthening market at $1.50-$1.65. Consuming markets continued steady at $1.25-$1.75 and reached $2 in several instances. Cabbage sales were slow and weak. Beans still show a weak tone. Colorado Pinto held unchanged at $6 per 100 pounds to growers at shipping points and ranged weaker at Denver at $8.25-$8.90, California limas weakened at shipping points, being offered at $10-$10.25 to growers and ranged $11.75-$12 at Chicago. Choice California small whites declined to $9-$9.24 to growers and ruled $11 in New York, Michigan choice hand picked were $7.50-$7.75 in producing sections. Celery was fairly steady.

NORMAL CONDITIONS RETURN.

The market has settled down to normal conditions and the supply of stock is increasing daily. Business is holding up well, but prices have dropped, due to the large quantity of stock being received. There is a general cleanup each day, however. The warm weather of the past few weeks has brought on all the mid-season and late varieties of chrysanthemums, which has resulted in an oversupply. The first football game of the season was played here November 9, and caused an extra demand for the yellow varieties. Morgan and Bonaffon were in full crop and met the situation. There is a good supply of long stemmed roses on the market and these move slowly at present. Shorts and medium stock sell better. Carnations are about the only item that continues to hold up in price. The supply is limited and the demand is heavy. Violets are now a regular feature but are slow in moving. Lilies are coming in limited quantities but sufficient to meet the demand. Pompons in all colors are seen in abundance and move very well. American Beauties have slow sales. Novelty roses have no demand at all. Greens are scarce and ferns have advanced to $4 per 1,000.

CLUB MEETING.

The regular meeting of the florists' club will held November 5 in the North Side Carnegie Hall. "Chrysanthemums" was the subject of the evening, and some very fine specimens were shown, the best ever displayed at any local club meeting. Before taking up the chrysanthemums, it was decided by the members present to continue holding meetings in the present location, and a better attendance was promised for the coming season. F. B. Frauenfelder, of 3300 Fleming avenue, was proposed for membership by Jas. Moore; also, Wm. Bonsey, H. Etherington, C. L. Meyer, Noah Aldridge, of Finleyville, L. Lighthouse, E. F. Engle, of Rochester, Herbert C. Beckett, of Millvale, and E. W. Smith, of 6923 Bennett street, were proposed by E. J. McCallum.

Turning to the chrysanthemums, the first collection brought to our attention was a vase of a new yellow seedling grown by Manos Curran, of Sewickley, and generally pronounced as the largest blooms ever shown at a club meeting. It is a cross between Turner and Odessa, one of them measuring 11 inches across and 34 inches around. Mr. Curran stated he did not want it passed on for points, as he expected better results next year, and would then be glad to do so. He expects to name it, "Sewickley". He also had quite a collection of seedling pompons, among them a white and a pink, giving promise of good commercial value.

Wm. Thompson's collection was next in order. He showed W. E. Tricker, Rose Pockett, Wm. Rigby, Mary Mason, Nag-ir-roc, Yellow Turner, White Turner, Nerissa, Jas. Frazer, Daily Mail, Drabble, Louisa Pockett, Earl Kitchner, and Wood Mason; also, a fine lot of pompons. Jas. Murphy showed Lady Hopton, Menden, Yellow Turner, Nerissa, White Turner, Daily Mail, Louisa Pockett, Waite, Bob Pulling, Converse, Nag-ir-roc, R. C. Pulling, Odessa, and a collection of pompons. Jas. Stewart had Rose Porter, Odessa, Mrs. Firestone, Louisa Pockett, Wm. Rigby, and Joan of Arc.

Herman Roff showed White and Yellow Turner, Pockett, Odessa, Henry Stevens, Mary Mason, Elberon, Menden, Daily Mail, some pompons and a bush of Garza almost six feet high. Schenley Park had White and Yellow Turner, Nerissa, Daily Mail, R. C. Pulling, Odessa and pompons. Highland Park showed Louisa Pockett, Nerissa, White and Yellow Turner. Their grower was not present, but Mr. Jones of Schenley Park explained that they had been grown under difficulties.

The following awards were voted: First class cultural certificate to Manos Curran for his new yellow seedling. Cultural certificate for collection of chrysanthemums to the following: Wm. Thompson, Jas. Murphy, Jas. Stewart, Herman Roff, and Schenley Park, with a vote of thanks to all exhibitors. The next meeting will be held December 3. Christmas plants, flowers, and novelties will be the subject.

MODIFIED COAL RULING PLEASES.

The florists in this section are all very well pleased with the new ruling of the fuel administration, which allows all growers 100 per cent coal. There is very little difficulty in getting coal in this section and many have had a good supply on hand. Those that did not are all making arrangements to haul their supply at once as there are many small mines in this section that can supply of coal promptly. The outlook for the coming season is very good and with the good news of the past few days, the florist business should be one of the best in many years. M.

Evergreen Barberries.

It is a satisfaction to be able to report that the four species of evergreen barberries from western China in the collection, Berberis Julianae, B. Sargentiana, B. Gagnepainii and B. verruculosa, are now in good condition, although the leaves of all but the last species were killed and many of those of B. verruculosa were injured. It may be expected therefore that these beautiful plants may continue to live in eastern Massachusetts if suitable positions can be found for them.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, November 7, 1918.

CONFERENCE AT BOSTON.

The New England gardeners' conference, which was scheduled to be held in Boston, October 8, but was postponed owing to the "flu" epidemic, will be held at Horticultural hall in that city under the auspices of the Boston members of the National Association of Gardeners, Friday evening, November 22. The meeting will be called to order at the early hour of 6:30 o'clock to permit of ample time for a full discussion of the subjects to be presented.

All affiliated with the profession of gardening are invited to attend the conference, which may be counted on to prove of more than passing interest at this time, involving as it will, the discussion of the many problems which will confront the gardening profession during the post-war period.

M. C. EBEL, Secretary.

Gov. Lowden on Illinois Apples.

During the week beginning November 18, there will be held in Chicago, at the Morrison hotel, the Illinois First Great Apple Show, the first comprehensive exhibit ever made of Illinois apples. This show is promoted by the Illinois State Horticultural Society, and is held under the auspices of the State Council of Defense.

I desire to call the attention of our people to the importance of this exhibition. I have advocated this for years. Illinois is one of the great apple producing states in the Union, and yet our other industries have so overshadowed the apple industry that our people generally are surprised to learn that Illinois apples are unsurpassed. While we are one of the leading states in apple culture, it is estimated that not 20 per cent of our acreage in apple trees receives any intelligent attention. The state is dotted all over with apple orchards, that go unpruned, that are not sprayed, that, therefore, are practically valueless, and which could be made a profitable feature of the farm.

In some of the older states, similar neglected orchards have been bought up by enterprising and practical men, and made a great success. The time has come in Illinois when the thousands upon thousands of acres in unproducing orchards should be reclaimed and made to pay their way. Particularly, at this time, is it culpably careless to neglect this source of supply of wholesome food. If the orchards of Illinois were properly cared for, their production would take the place of tons of food which could be sent to our soldiers, and our allies.

A special feature of the great show to be held in Chicago will be demonstrations of how to properly care for orchards, and no farmer in Illinois, who owns an orchard, can afford to remain away. If the money which has gone out of the state, and been lost in orchard investments elsewhere, had been invested at home, in Illinois orchards, the investors would have realized handsome profits and Illinois would have vastly increased its apple output.

I regard this First Great Apple Show as one of the most notable and valuable efforts for conservation of the year.

Trees Memorials to American Dead.

New York, November 8.—Governors of all states in the union have been asked to co-operate in a plan to plant along transcontinental highways and public roads memorial trees for the nation's dead soldiers and sailors, it was announced today by the American Forestry Association. Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the association, said the idea had been taken up by many towns and cities, and the General Federation of Women's Clubs has before it a proposition to plant memorial trees along the Lincoln highway.

Massachusetts Hort. Society Show.

The autumn exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, held in Horticultural hall, Boston, Mass., November 6-7, brought out an excellent showing in plants, flowers, fruits and vegetables. While the entries, due to existing conditions, were not as numerous as in former years, much of the stock showed excellent form and the attendance was very satisfactory.

In the cut flower and plant section, silver medals were awarded to Joseph A. Manda, West Orange, N. J., for Cypripedium insigne Sanderae; Albert C. Burrage, for group of orchids and foliage plants, and to E. S. Webster (Peter Arnott, Jr.) for Begonia Exquisite and 12 specimen plants of winter-flowering varieties. A certificate of merit was given to F. Dörner & Sons Co., Lafayette, Ind., for Carnation 119, and the same firm received honorable mention for Carnation No. 167. Like honors were also awarded to Miss F. P. Mason for Chrysanthemum Monadnock, Nashville, and Radio. The Allenton Conservatories were given a vote of thanks for a fine group display of flowering and foliage plants. H. C. T.

MARKET HAS FAIR SUPPLY.

Chrysanthemums are plentiful and retail from $2 to $6. Carnations are coming in very slowly, but the demand is light at present. Roses are moving well at prices ranging from $1.50 to $5 per dozen according to quality. Violets are now coming in and are offered in the retail stores at $1 per 100.

NOTES.

Mrs. John G. Bertman died November 4 at her home in New Albany. Her husband is the oldest florist in that vicinity, having been in business in one location for more than 50 years.

Andners Rasmussen, the New Albany grower, is cutting fine chrysanthemums in quantity and finds a ready sale for the entire crop locally. His roses and carnations are also looking well.

On November 11, this city went wild celebrating "Victory" day. The Jacob Schulz Co. disposed of a large number of large white chrysanthemums, tied with red, white and blue ribbon.

The new Nanz & Neuner Co. are now cutting fine Kaiserin and Radiance Roses.

The whole city was enveloped in a great celebration over the signing of the armistice between the Allies and the Germans, and the celebration was attended by the sale of hundreds of flowers, as nearly everyone in the parade was wearing a chrysanthemum. The closing ban, which was expected to be raised November 9, was continued by the local board of health on account of the outbreak of a number of new cases. The great influx of funeral work continued throughout last week, with an especially heavy demand the last few days. Outside of this, the call was light, as no flowers were sent to the hospitals. Counter trade was good. The supply of chrysanthemums is very heavy, with many of the late varieties being forced into the market by the mild weather and sunshine of the past week. Pompons are more popular this year than ever before. It is thought, from the present outlook, that there will be a scarcity of chrysanthemums for Thanksgiving, as many of the varieties which are counted upon for this holiday are coming into the market now on account of the warm weather.

CLUB MEETING.

The monthly meeting of the florists' club was held November 8 at the store of the Flick Floral Co. President Wenninghoff was in the chair. It was decided, on account of present conditions, not to hold a flower show this fall. The principal business of the meeting was the matter of the city greenhouses selling their surplus stock through the 5 and 10 cent stores and department stores below market prices. This was taken up with the city commissioners on the park board, a letter being sent to the board asking the stock of the city greenhouses be sold at least at market prices.

NOTES.

Miss Helen Patten, proprietor of the Patten Flower Shop, Toledo, Ohio, is in this city for a week's visit with her mother and other relatives. Miss Patten volunteered her services to the Red Cross some time ago, and is expecting a call for duty at any time. She reports business in Toledo exceptionally active this fall.

The Flick Floral Co. is cutting a heavy crop of chrysanthemums, with some exceptionally fine specimens of Golden Wedding, Eaton and Bonnaillon in evidence. Out-of-town funeral pieces have been in good demand.

TRADE BACK IN NORMAL CHANNELS.

The floral business in this city has about settled down to normal and everything is moving along in the same old groove. Trade is very good, prices continue to be very satisfactory, and on a paying basis in spite of the great advance in the price of labor and the scarcity and high price of coal. Stock is coming in abundantly sufficient for any and all demands. There are no social activities, only Red Cross meetings and war assemblages. Even the society columns of the daily papers are no longer headed "Society," but instead in fine headlines are the words "Woman's Activities." There are very few weddings, and the long string of bridesmaids, each carrying a huge bouquet is a thing of the past. Thomas Joy's "Say it with flowers," on his conspicuous wall sign, meets with no endorsement, for there are very few left to say anything, and the society girls have for the most part gone to work at the powder plant. So there are few weddings, and funeral work continues to hold the balance of trade. Chrysanthemums are very abundant, but little short of a glut—some very handsome ones, and all very beautiful. Roses, too, are coming in great perfection. Mme. Russell, Columbia Ophelia, Killarneys, Hoosier Beauty, Shawyer, and other popular favorites to suit any trade or pocket-book. Carnations are attaining full perfection and are double in quantity what they were a week or two ago. Some of the growers have lily of the valley, and others have lilies, but neither in very great abundance. Violets do not seem to be very plentiful. In fact, some of the growers are not trying them this season at all. Pot chrysanthemums are in good demand, and are selling at reasonable rates. This season has just had its first killing frost, and the weather is still pleasant with good sunshine; days very favorable to the flowers.

NOTES.

Thomas Joy has recovered his automobile which was stolen a few weeks ago. The Joy Floral Company has an abundance of fine flowers, chrysanthemums of every color and description, roses, carnations and some lily of the valley. Trade has been good.

Geny Brothers are bringing in some exceptionally fine stock in lilies, roses, chrysanthemums and carnations, and have a good demand for all kinds of flowers. They have some fine chrysanthemum plants, for which there are good sales.

The McIntyre Floral Company has opened up again in the market house with chrysanthemum plants and boxes of cut flowers, which are sold readily to the floating patronage.

Louis Haury, Jr., has a stall in the market selling Lorraine begonias and ferns.

THANKSGIVING SUGGESTIONS.

Thanksgiving.

Of all national feast days appointed by the various presidents of this great country as a day of prayer and thanksgiving, the coming occasion will be the most generally observed of the many that have gone before. The florists are here presented with a great opportunity in this festal holiday, the third in importance of the year, to bring before the people and emphasize the fact that the best way to voice the spirit of thanksgiving is "To Say It With Flowers." Every possible preparation should be made so that all available lines in both cut flowers and plants should be full and complete. The coming and importance of the day should also be featured, not in a perfunctory way, but as a great event, a celebration, in which everybody as a matter of course will participate.

A well-worded circular, emphasizing particularly the national character of the coming event, its great general observance this year, and the important part that flowers should take in the exchange of friendly greetings or as gifts, and in the homes and particularly decorations for the table, should be sent to all customers. A description of the plants and flowers suitable for these purposes which will be important items of the stock, and an invitation to make an early call should result in many advance orders.

All indications point to a scarcity of flowers; the forward season has brought the chrysanthemums in from a week to 10 days sooner than usual. Many late varieties are already cut out, and as they have always played such an important part in the demand at this season, their scarcity will call for the use of other flowers which are never any too plentiful at this time. To help out the situation, there should be a good stock of foliage and flowering plants; pot chrysanthemums, together with cyclamens and begonias, the advanced plants of which are now quite well flowered, together with Otaheite oranges, Jerusalem cherries and Celestial peppers, there is presented a good variety, in this section. In foliage plants, palms in medium sizes, ferns in variety, dracenas, pandanus, crotons, rubbers, and the aspidistras, will include most of the popular house plants. These should be for the most part selected stock, that is, each item perfect in itself and salable. There is a failing many buyers have of favoring low prices rather than quality; the extra grade is thought good enough, when the special, which costs but a few cents more, has the finish which puts it across in the store, when the ordinary stock receives little or no attention.

The featuring of these offerings is also very important. Each specimen should receive some little mark of attention, such as crepe paper around the pot, bound with a fiber ribbon, which in a blooming plant, is to be the color of the flower. A number of choice specimens can be placed in jardinières or other fancy pot covers to advantage and given prominent locations where they will add materially to the decorative effect of the store. The idea is to make them so attractive that those who had no intention of buying, are captivated, and order the plant sent home or as a gift to a friend.

A few nicely arranged baskets of foliage and flowering plants will attract favorable attention. They add a good finish to any stock, creating a demand and sales, that without their display, would be lacking. Choice blooms of chrysanthemums, while beautiful in themselves, can be made more attractive, if arranged in large vase baskets with high handles decorated with autumn branches and bows of ribbon the color of a shade that will contrast favorably with that of the flower. Blooms can be sold from these the same as from jars, while frequently the beautiful arrangements is sold as it stands.

It is generally the wind-up of the pompons, for which there is always a good demand from customers of modest means, who feel that it would not be Thanksgiving without a few flowers on the table. It will not take long to fill up a couple of dozen tumblers or small vase baskets with a few pompons and autumn leaves, which will be sure to find buyers at a good profit. There is also generally a strong demand for table ferns at this time, of which there should be a variety of the most popular sorts. Filling fern dishes is looked upon by some as a necessary evil, a part of the work in which there is no profit. Attention to these small details is, however, very essential, as a hit made here, where someone else has fallen down, at times secures a good account, which in the end is found profitable and leads to much other business.

There is frequently a boost to the window box filling, when with company coming, there is a quick order to have these attended to at once, so that a supply of evergreens should be on hand for a quick handling of the job. A display of tub evergreens about the outside front of the store, is decorative, and productive of sales to persons, who, on seeing them, remember that a pair would look well either side their front door, and that the short bushy stock would make a nice center for the empty vases out in the yard.

There is nothing so effective and striking, when it is desired to call particular attention to any event, as an elaborate decoration of the front of the store. It must, if possible, be unique in character, or of such a nature that will surely catch the eye of those who pass on either side of the street. A two-foot wide, bevelled frame, either side the front, and extending across the top at the cornices above the window, covered with cornstalks; the husked ears showing conspicuously, and the sameness relieved with sheaves of wheat at the corners and intervals, will, if edged or finished with cut evergreen, make quite a striking exterior that will at once suggest the day.

The importance of the holiday as a source of business and its possibilities calls for careful planning and preparation, of which the above are but a few suggestions, each business large or small being benefited, depending on the judgment and energy with which the work is carried out.

Decorating the Window.

The Thanksgiving service, coming as it does after the bountiful harvest, when the fruits of the trees and the grains and roots of the fields have been gathered in, makes these products appropriate in the decorative work of featuring the day. As an addition, we have this year the fruits of our victory in the great world's war, which can be exemplified in the display of the flags of all nations who were with us in the conflict.

There are many ways in which this material can be arranged to make an attractive and seasonable window. Cornstalks, with ears partially husked, stood upright at the rear make a good background. Coming from this is a large wicker cornucopia, from which pours on to the floor of the window a generous volume of fruit and vegetables. At one side of this centerpiece can be placed a large basket of fruit and flowers, tied with a ribbon, on which, in gilt letters is the word "Thanksgiving." Another basket of similar design, with red, white and blue flowers, and tied with tricolor ribbon, bears in gilt letters the inscription, "Victory." This is placed opposite the other basket. Two American flags can be draped with the fields together in the center, high up in the rear over the cornstalk background, from the center of which projects on small staffs, the flags of the Allies. In the front of the window can be placed several well made corsage bouquets tied with tricolor or other ribbons. The above, in a measure conventional, but as such a decoration is appropriate and made but once a year, it will stand repetition with some variation.

Table Decorations.

The important feature of Thanksgiving, aside from the religious service, is the dinner, around which cluster so many pleasant memories of the old folks at home. Other close friends are often invited, so that with company coming, the table must be made to look its very best. The great victory in which so many of the flower of the land have taken part, culminating as it has just at this time, must be emphasized by the use of the national colors with those of the Allies, which can be worked in nicely with the fruits and flowers. A tricolor ribbon pinned to the cloth around the table, just inside the plate line, with a raised pompon of the same at the corners, makes a good setting, inside of which can be arranged the fruits and flowers. A bank of green extending the full length of the table is made of growing ferns, tied or placed in moss on a board; this can be made in several sections, two, if there is to be one tall vase in the center, and three if two vases are used. The vases filled, preferably with long stemmed chrysanthemums, which are carried above the line of vision, make a good showing. A number of small cornucopias, according to the size of the table, are placed in the bank of ferns and filled alternately with fruit and flowers, projecting their contents in either direction from the center. These flowers and fruits can extend a little onto the cloth, and relieve the straight line of the center piece. Medium-sized United States and Allied flags will then add a patriotic finish.

A pretty center for a smaller table is made with two cornucopias with the small ends of the horns linked around a tall center vase, which is filled with chrysanthemums, while the horns hold fruit and flowers, the overflow of which can be carried along the cloth to any desired distance. The round table, with its tall center vase, will look well with a wreath or heavy garland, worked out with the aid of five small rose bowls, in which are to be placed pompon chrysanthemums, autumn foliage, asparagus or other green. This wreath should come just inside the plate line. The center vase may be surrounded at the bottom with a built up pyramid of fruit, into which is to be placed Old Glory and Allied flag. These latter can also be placed on the chandelier, which should also be touched up with green and autumn leaves.

The Victory Corsage.

As at Easter, no lady likes to attend church, or feels she is correctly attired, without the regulation corsage of flowers. So it is at Thanksgiving, when there is always a good demand for these personal adornments. Frequently, in the cities, where the large colleges meet for their annual football contest, every lady that attends feels she must wear flowers of the college colors, the demand for which is often a considerable part of the trade of the day. Violets are always favorites, being one of the colors of many of the colleges. This year violets, red roses and white carnations, tied with the combination colored ribbons of any college, will be approprate and as highly prized as any worn. Crimson and white chrysanthemums and violets for those who want a more showy bunch will fill the bill as well. Cattleyas and violets, with red and white roses at the tricolor ribbon, will work out very well. For the boutonniere, the red and white carnation and a few violets or similar colored roses and violets, tied with narrow tricolor ribbon, is conventional. These flowers should be wired short so that the stem or handle shall be slender enough to go into the buttonhole of the coat without forcing. The man who can make a boutonniere perfect in this respect is entitled to the A. B. card of the profession.

THANKSGIVING OPEN WORK BASKET OF FLOWERS AND FRUIT.

One Man Shops.

The ambition and hope of most young men working in the business is that they will some day have a shop of their own. However promising this may seem to the uninitiated, but very few reach even a measure of success; statistics say not more than five in every 100. Few men have what is known as business instinct; some are born with it, a few acquire it to a more or less degree, but to the great majority, it is a will of the wisp. Many a good man, who is able and efficient under the guiding hand of his employer, falls down miserably when he takes on the financial load under his own planning and management.

The man who desires to open a flower shop, should have a fundamental or ground work knowledge of the business, gained preferably by his experience in the service of a grower-retailer, where he gets a general idea of plant life, their names, methods of culture, etc. Many successful retail store men have, however, graduated from the school of hard knocks, gaining their experience from selling flowers on the streets. Such men are traders, whose sales are strictly cash. They learn, of necessity, something which it appears is so hard for many store keepers to find out, and that is, just how much profit there is in the day's business, and how they stand at the end of the month. Many men go behind without knowing it, as they are busy all the time and doing so much business, selling at or about 100 per cent gross profit that, of course, they are making money. A great fallacy, as no man, with store rent and all the other expenses that go along with the carrying on of a business, handling such perishable stock as plants and cut flowers, can, unless he makes a complete turnover every day, come out ahead on a two for one basis. The sales price should be at least $2.50 for every $1.00 worth at cost of perishable stock. A great trouble with many is, that they are not able to concentrate, that is, give their undivided attention to their business.

The man who starts out for himself, having but a small capital, is, or should be, on the job all the time; he is carving out his own fortune, and he should see that every move made is a step in the right direction, always a bit forward. The first matter of importance is location. He should select a house and store together, as near the business center of a residence district as he can afford in the matter of rent. It should preferably be a small store, with a good show window, as it is much better to have a nicely arranged and well filled small shop, than a large place that is hard to furnish and keep clean, and never appears to be well stocked. Business may be gradually worked up in a quieter location, but a hustler will get his trade much quicker in the center, where there is life and activity and throngs to be attracted by his display.

The furnishings of the store should be arranged so as to economize room and allow as much display space as possible. Shelves against the wall, enced help. Frequently such a personally conducted concern, showing a good profit each year, will become too much for one man. Additional help is engaged; probably a move is made to a larger store, a natural growth that with the right management is beneficial. If, however, as is so often the case, the proprietor under the new order of things loses his concentrative energy, becomes interested in matters outside of his business, and begins to with a table or counter underneath of generous width, below which can be closets or shelves for stock or boxes, save much more space than if the counter stood in front of the shelves with a passage behind. Business can be transacted better, in fact, when all portions of the store and stock are accessible without coming from behind a counter. The flower case should be placed in the middle of the store at the rear, far enough front, however, to leave a space behind for a table for mousing or doing other work that may litter up the floor. An office desk, alongside of which may be stood the cash register, is placed on the opposite side from the counter. In front of this is a shelf in which customers will find cards, envelopes and ink. This in time can be partially enclosed with a lattice or railing to give it the dignity of an office. Several small show display tables, stout but plain, which can be moved about to fit in with different arrangements of the store, together with a couple of chairs, about complete the necessary furniture.

The benefit of having store and dwelling together is that the proprietor is always on the job, and that some member of the family can be called in emergencies, or to attend the shop while the active head is unavoidably absent. The one-man business, with its low expenses, if it is kept going vigorously, should show a good profit at the end of the year. There will be no leaks, or losses, such as often experienced from dishonest and inexperienced depend on the employees to look after things during absences that he would not have thought of taking before, then a retrograde movement sets in. Business falls off, the bills pile up, and the result is disaster.

The economically managed small business intelligently handled, will provide a good living, and eventually a competence, to the man who will concentrate his energies and work up a clientele of satisfied customers, on whose trade he can depend. If his location has been well selected, he should, as soon as possible, purchase the property, which can frequently be done in such a way as to cost little more annually than rental, but which in a term of years, gives him absolute ownership. Eventually, real estate of this character, will advance so in value as to become a very material asset.

ALLENTOWN, PA.—The florists of this city and vicinity have organized the Lehigh Valley Florists' Club. John F. Horn has been elected president and Ernest Ashley, secretary-treasurer.

MANISTEE, MICH.—The annual display of chrysanthemums at the Joseph Clarkson greenhouses, always a feature looked forward to by flower lovers of this city, this year surpassed all former efforts as far as beauty and varieties were concerned. Mr. Clarkson has kept the "home fire burning" by boosting the profession despite the strenuous times, and as a result has no complaint to make regarding business.

WITH THE GROWERS

Some Philadelphia Rose Growers.

On the invitation of George and Alfred Burton to visit an important section of the rose growing industry in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pa., including establishments at Chestnut Hill and in Bucks and Montgomery counties, November 14, a party composed of the following gladly responded: S. S. Pennock, George C. Watson, William Colflesh, John Andre of Doylestown, William Lehr and William E. McKissick of Baltimore, Md., William E. Engler, Arthur A. Niessen, John Burton and Robert Kift. Three large touring cars conveyed the party. John Burton's was driven by his chauffeur, while S. S. Pennock and John Andre handled the others like veterans. The start was made from the Burton establishment at Wyndmoor at 7 a. m., which necessitated rather early rising on the part of some of the party. The day was ideal.

The John Burton range, which is conducted by his son, George, was the first inspected. American Beauty, which is planted on shallow raised benches about a foot above the ground, was seen in splendid condition, filling house after house in this section. No one could wish for a more promising outlook, the plants having been pinched for the most part to come in just before and about the Christmas holidays. Thora, a light cream colored sport of Maryland, which originated here, has been a wonderful producer, and the same is true of a block of the latter, these two varieties being the best money getters on the place. Both were in good crop during October, that month of golden opportunity.

Alfred Burton's establishment, adjoining, is filled with American Beauty and Russell, the latter being grown here to perfection, crops to cut all of the time, both winter and summer, with full productive periods at times of greatest demand. The American Beauty stock is also in fine shape. George Burton's range on Queen street, a few blocks away, contains principally American Beauty. Altogether he has 40,000 plants, all having that splendid, healthy appearance and vigor that is the envy of all growers who see them. Ophelia and Hadley are also important items here.

Adjoining, so that it appears like one place, is the immense range of Myers & Samtman. American Beauty is also a specialty here, where for many years it has been the leading stock. The entire soil is changed and young stock planted every year. A few beds of last year's plants had been left in, which produce a good fall crop, but they make too much brush and take too long a rest afterwards. The entire work of refilling and planting American Beauty costs about seven cents per plant. The removal of the old soil insures against insects and fungus and a fresh start is thus made with everything in good order. The stock appeared in splendid condition. Ophelia and Sunburst were quantity stocks and there was a good percentage root. A bright yellow sport of Ophelia also looks promising. An overhead system of watering has been found a great labor saver, especially in summer, as 40,000 square feet of bench space can be well watered in one hour and a half.

John Welsh Young was next visited, and here the proprietor was found busy with the hoe. An attempt had been made to overcome the coal shortage by using wood in connection. This had proved feasible but more work was entailed. Houses that were to have been thrown cold are now, under the new fuel conditions, to be brought into bearing as soon as possible. A house of Ophelia will be ready for a heavy cut shortly.

George Campbell's establishment at Flourtown was as neat as if he had no labor difficulties. Prima Donna is well done here, paying 95 cents per plant last year. Richmond is also a standby. The stock in this large range was full of strong young growths which had been pinched the last of October for the Christmas crop, which last year was 15,000 buds from 4,500 plants. He had managed somehow to get along with half the force of last year. George Savage, at Gwynedd, makes a specialty of snapdragon. His crops this year are later than usual, but look promising. A border of parsley around all the beds, had been found a good side crop. Several long benches of bouvardia were good stock.

The mammoth houses of the Florex Gardens, at North Wales, soon hove into sight. One must see these huge ranges to realize the vast extent of ground covered. The largest is 175x750 feet, occupying nearly three acres. This entire surface is covered with ground beds of roses. The specialties are Prima Donna and September Morn, which are doing well and are in great demand. Ophelia and White Killarney are also largely grown. A bed of the new Columbia made its debut with a return of 35 cents per plant, for the month of October, which period had been the most profitable in the history of the place. A large carnation range was filled with plants that looked most promising. Snapdragon is also most in quantity. Messrs. Mayhew and Geiger are both to be congratulated on the excellent appearance of the stock done in such a large way, the roses alone numbering 135,000 plants.

After enjoying a substantial lunch at the hotel in Hatboro, the next stop was at Stephen Mortenson's, Southampton, where a house of Columbia was conspicuous for its strong and vigorous growth. It had so far paid better than Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

block of Hilda, their light pink sport of Maryland, which is the best paying rose on the place. It was this firm that discovered the commercial value of Maryland. Their display of a vase of blooms of great perfection at Chicago at a time when many had condemned this variety, resulted in its adoption as one of the standard and most valued forcing roses. Russell and others are propagated at this establishment with seeming ease. Certain flowering shoots are disbudded at the proper time. This growth continues and when sufficiently ripened and firm, is made into cuttings of which a large any rose he had ever grown. Ophelia is a leader, which is splendidly done. Killarney and Killarney Brilliant are seen in large blocks and are considered good money getters.

The Jos. Heacock Co.'s range at Roelefs, was quite a run from the last stop, but well worth the ride. Five thousand Columbia, vigorous and strong, had been giving freely of their buds all fall, and look in splendid condition. The cut averages more specials than any other rose. The Killarneys, both white and pink, are still largely grown. A block of 5,000 Richmond was being groomed for the holidays. This is the home of the Hadley, for it is done better here than in most places. It is given a house to itself and is wonderful in its strength and vigor; although the crop was said to be going off, some plants were seen with six buds on long stems, all about ready to cut.

The Hillside growers were next on the list, but Adolph Farenwald was the only man visited, as it was then too dark to see anything to advantage. Owing to the scarcity of labor, Mr. Farenwald was found shoveling coal. Shawyer is largely grown here, and there is also a good block of Russell. All had wanted to have a look at Teddy Towill's Mrs. Stotesbury, and Victor Groschen's Russells, but it was not to be. After a short run, the party was seated around the hospitable board at the residence of Arthur Burton, where while enjoying a good dinner, they discussed the details of the delightful trip.

TORONTO, ONT.—C. A. Urbach, who has been in the florist business on Bloor street for 25 years, died recently.

DALLAS, TEX.—Owing to the death of Seth Miller, late president of the Green Floral Co., of this city, the property will probably be offered for sale to close the estate.

National Publicity for Flowers.

With the war practically ended, and a reduction in the demand upon the purses of the public for war charities in sight, the so-called patriotic economies which have for some time been in evidence in a majority of the homes of the nation should gradually disappear, and among them the rather general discontinuance of the use of flowers. If, as all who have followed the work of our publicity campaign and have been impressed with the beneficial results obtained through it are glad to admit, the movement of flowers has been greatly accelerated through the publicity gained in times when opposition to their use was everywhere painfully apparent, what should we expect when the people are free to enjoy the possession and use of flowers and plants without being subject to criticism for a supposed extravagance?

That our products are necessary and desirable in the home is a claim which we have vigorously supported in our magazine advertising, and it is the purpose of our committees to keep before the public continuously the suggestion that flowers and plants brighten and cheer homes which otherwise would be all too dreary and colorless. It will also be noticed that we are emphasizing the adaptability of our products for gift purposes, and as mediums for the expression of sentiment under any and all conditions. Our slogan, "Say It with Flowers," has, to use a common expression, "caught on," evidence of this coming to us almost daily. Only yesterday, we received from our Washington representative a cartoon clipped from the Washington Star, depicting a cartoon hero nonplussed at the exorbitant prices a fruit dealer demanded for a hospital gift, and his ultimate decision to use flowers instead. The newspaper mentioned was only one of a large syndicate of papers using this cartoon.

Florists who are not displaying our slogan are making a great mistake. A subscriber in Texas, ordering from our promotion bureau two additional glass signs, says: "We think they are fine and bring more business."

Who shall say that our Christmas advertisement appearing in national magazines of enormous circulation will not induce many who cannot make up their minds as to the nature of their anticipated Christmas offering to "say it with flowers?" And there is no doubt that, were it possible, many recipients of presents more or less useless or unserviceable would willingly exchange them for a handsome basket of flowers. Hardly an occasion could be suggested when flowers might be declared unsuitable for gift purposes.

But it is necessary that the public be made to look upon our products in this light, and there is only one medium for the accomplishment of this—publicity, properly conducted. The magazine advertising the committee has arranged since the beginning of the year has proved conclusively that the results we are after are sure of attainment; not only is it conceded that the funds available have been well expended, but the committee is quite satisfied that it would be to our advantage to double, or even treble our expenditures in the coming year, so great is the benefit sure to result.

It is, however, up to the trade to say whether the necessary fund will be forthcoming. We are still short about $5,000 to complete our plans for 1918, and are relying upon those who have not yet turned in a contribution to make up this sum. Is it possible that among the 10,000 or more florists who have not subscribed, and who would not miss the small ratio to be expected of them, there is not sufficient interest in our movement to insure the speedy collection of the small sum required? The committees are waiting for an answer. If any information further than that which has been supplied is needed, it is cheerfully available on application to the secretary.

JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

Password as Well as Slogan.

Business everywhere during the present period, especially in the florist line, has gone beyond the expectation of us all, of course, in a great measure due to the unfortunate epidemic which necessitated everyone being worked to the limit, employer and employe alike, and everybody from the wireworker to grower sharing in the rush to fill orders which came from all directions.

During a rush like the present, we are apt to forget the condition of the future, as, for instance, where the demands for flowers have been many on account of the influenza epidemic, there would be a curtailment of flowers for personal use later on, due to the fact that the unusual expenditure by the customer will alter conditions. It is up to us to keep the ball rolling by continually advertising our slogan, "Say It With Flowers."

Many may say, "Why advertise our product, when we have a shortage of flowers, as perhaps will be the case later?" Do you realize that when you create the demand, you will also create something that will fill the bill, if not with one thing, then with another?

Have you noticed how many manufacturers have been advertising their product to the public, although the government has commandeered their entire output for the period of the war? This is done for the sole purpose of holding the good will in the eyes of the public, so that their product may not be forgotten when times become normal again.

What do you think the slogan will mean to every thinking man, woman or child, who, when in doubt as to what to send to mother, father, sister or brother? Do you realize the effect it will have? And if all who use printer's ink will make use of it, do you think of what the future has in store for you? Go the limit with the slogan, and you will merit the benefits more and more.

TORONTO, ONT.—William D. Manton, son of Thomas Manton, well-known florist of this city, has been wounded in action, but is recovering rapidly.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Miss H. B. Whitted has opened an attractive little flower shop on Spruce street, and is receiving generous support from her former patrons.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.—The chrysanthemum show being held in the city conservatories under the auspices of the Red Cross, will, it is believed, realize nearly $1,000 for the war relief work of that organization.

Boucher's Chrysanthemum Display.

The chrysanthemum display at the store of George T. Boucher, Rochester, N. Y., November 11-16, which has come to be an annual event, proved unusually successful this year, the show being visited by thousands. Upon entering the spacious establishment a group of pompons of different sizes and colors, staged at the left, presented an attractive sight. In all there were 50 sorts, among the best being Jane Ingalls, Neola, Myers and Perfection. To the right were huge vases of Turner, Chieftain, Marigold, Davis, Chrysolora and others, while in the center of the store was an electric fountain surrounded by Farleyense and groupings of bronze pompons. A square table held centerpieces and favors for Thanksgiving day. At the rear of this were the flags of the Allies arranged together. In the rose display were choice specimens of Columbia, Francis Scott Key, Ophelia, Hadley, Hoosier Beauty, Stanley, Killarney Queen and Sunburst. The ceiling was hung with white lattice work with oak leaves and Japanese lanterns dropped at irregular intervals. The windows contained choice baskets of fruit and flowers with vases of Davis and Turner chrysanthemums. Several Grecian urns were filled with large blooms and striking pompons.

TRADE UNUSUALLY HEAVY FOR SEASON.

Business during the past few weeks has probably been the heaviest in the history of the trade in this city at this period of the year. The ravages of the Spanish influenza have been very heavy and the great number of deaths made a heavy demand on the florist trade in every part of the city. There is, and still is, a very fine cut of all seasonable stock. The supply of chrysanthemums is excellent and enormous quantities are disposed of at the market every day. Yellow William Turner is the finest thing being offered at present. The very fine Wells Late Pink and May Hunter are coming in also. In whites, Jennie Nonin and Turner are the leaders. White Chieftain is about over for the season. The Tuxedo anemones have made their appearance in a commercial way and are rapidly gaining popular favor. The old favorite, Major Bonaffon, is now at its best and seems to be just as popular as ever. Pompons are plentiful, but are not in much demand. Roses are now of extra fine quality. Very fine Russell, Ophelia and Shawyer are coming in and bringing good figures. They are in heavy demand, both for local trade and shipping. Cecile Brunner and Irish Elegance are rather plentiful and sell quickly. Very few American Beauties are being offered as yet, but the growers promise a ample supply shortly. Violets are now at their best and are coming in in heavy lots. Great quantities find an outlet to the street peddlers. The shipping demand for this flower is strong and steady. Gardenias are not so plentiful as heretofore, but the supply of orchids is increasing heavily every day. Cattleyas are very abundant and maintain steady prices. Yellow gladioli are being displayed prominently by many of the stores. The demand is steady for this flower. Snapdragons are beginning to arrive in limited quantities and sell quickly. No more dahlias are to be had, owing to rain and frost. The cold snap has also put all other outdoor arrivals out of the market for the season. Some excellent celosias in pots are to be seen and are very effective just now. Cyclamens are becoming more plentiful and popular. The supply of ferns and asparagus is shortening up considerably.

NOTES.

It is with feelings of deepest regret that we have to announce the death of Emile E. Ferrari, of the well known firm of Ferrari Bros., from influenza. Mr. Ferrari was one of the most prominent cut flower growers in the west. Together with his brother, Peter, he had built up one of the largest greenhouse establishments in California. He was born in Italy 50 years ago, but came here when quite young. He is survived by a widow and five children. The funeral was held November 11, and was attended by members of the trade from all over the state. The sympathy of the trade everywhere goes out to Mrs. Ferrari and family in their great loss.

Many well grown plants are being offered by the MacRorie-McLaren Co., on Powell street. Most of these come from the nursery at San Mateo. At the nursery the cyclamen plants, which Supt. McDonald has grown for this season, are the finest ever grown here, and that is saying a whole lot, as many thought last season's stock could not be improved upon. Dan MacRorie, who spends the greater part of his time at the nursery, thinks that the ornamental plant business will come into its own again this season, now that the war has ended. Business at the Powell street store is all that could be wished for.

W. H. Molliere, general manager of the various nursery departments of Geo. C. Roeding, spent several days in this city calling on the trade. He informs us that Mr. Roeding has made great improvements in the California Nursery at Niles since taking over that property last spring. Over $50,000 has been spent in improvements. Mr. Molliere is very optimistic over the nursery trade prospects. He says the trade in fruit trees, especially, promises to be unusually heavy.

At the Lynch Nursery Company at Menlo Park, heavy shipments of chrysanthemums are being forwarded to distant points every day. Several large houses of winter flowering snapdragons are almost ready for first cutting. Small shipments will start about December 1.

Sam Matraia, of the Art Floral Co., was confined to his home by illness recently. He has now fully recovered and is once more at his post. Trade has been very brisk here, the entire force being compelled to work all night several times during the week.

Manager J. A. Axell, of the E. W. McLellan Co., reports a very heavy shipping business. Their shipments of roses to the northwest are now at their height. Large lots of chrysanthemums and violets are also being sent to eastern points every day.

The orchid houses of John Carbone, at Berkeley, are wonderful just now. Thousands of cattleyas are in bloom and many more thousands are showing bud. He is busy supplying this city and distant points every day.

Martin Poss, of San Mateo, has been a heavy buyer in the market of late, supplying his store down the peninsula. He says trade was never better, the only difficulty being in getting enough stock.

Kenneth J. Murray, of Redwood City, is sending in a fine cut of roses to this market. His plantings of colored roses are heavy this year and he expects to begin cutting in about six weeks.

Charles Kruse, of Piedmont, is bringing into this market Cecile Brunner roses of the finest quality. He has several large houses of this favorite for his winter trade.

Peter Ferrari, of Ferrari Bros., who has been dangerously ill at one of the local hospitals, is reported to be slowly recovering. We all hope to see him around soon again.

The Francis Floral Co. has been doing a very satisfactory business of late. Funeral work continues to be the chief outlet for all flowers, owing to the epidemic.

Frank Pellicano says his firm has never been so busy as during the past week. The amount of funeral work turned out here has exceeded all expectations.

Mrs. Edna Nagel, of the Art Floral Company's force, has been seriously ill with influenza for several weeks. Late reports say she is now out of danger.

Podesta & Baldocchi report a very heavy business. This firm has been making splendid displays of cactylaeas, which always attract much attention.

JAMES T. LYNCH.

Cleveland.

HIGH PRICES ESTABLISH RECORD.

The market is short in all lines and grades and the prices realized by growers and retailers are the highest in the history of the trade in this city. Retailers who have made a feature of advertising $1.50 sprays are having a hard time of it. Everything in cut flowers and greens cleans up daily. An idea of the volume of funeral work turned out in this city during the influenza epidemic can be arrived at from the report of the board of health showing the number of deaths as 2,223.

XMAS.

Beginning November 18, a nominal charge will be made by the local wholesale cut flowers houses for delivery service. The city has been zoned, prices varying from 15 cents for downtown deliveries to 65 cents to outlying districts. The Cleveland Cut Flower Co. has disposed of its truck and has contracted for hauling and delivery at a flat rate.

Frank Ritzenthaler, of Knoble Bros., now with the army "Over There," writes that he has been appointed a sergeant. You cannot keep a good man down.

Charles F. Bastian, formerly with the Cleveland Florists' Exchange, has taken a position with the Cleveland Plant & Flower Co., High and Second streets.

Providence, R. I.

GOOD DEMAND AT REASONABLE PRICES.

Business during the past week has been satisfactory, with good stock selling at sight and at prices that may be said to be reasonable. Chrysanthemums are plentiful and roses are coming in better with prices lowering every day. This being show week most of the large chrysanthemums were held back for exhibition purposes.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY SHOW.

Under the auspices of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, the agricultural committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the Market Gardeners' Association, the annual flower show was held in this city, November 14-15. Former shows have been held by the horticultural society alone, and the combined exhibition this year brought out a greater display of fruits and vegetables, the exhibits of the market gardeners on this occasion proving a great success. Chrysanthemums, of course, proved the main attraction but the displays of other flowers were also very good. W. N. Craig, of Brookfield, Mass., was the judge and he said many of the displays excelled those seen in Boston last week. Among the principal prize winners were the T. J. Johnston Co., who took most of the prizes in the special classes; Frederick S. Peck, Barrington, R. I., first in the carnation class; Warwick Greenhouses, highest honors for violets, while in the chrysanthemum classes, the Maplehurst Greenhouses and the Warwick Greenhouses carried off the majority of the prizes.

OBITUARY.

William King Murray.

William King Murray, who for 50 years was one of the proprietors of the Bloodgood Nurseries, Flushing, now a part of the City of New York, died at his home, 238 Amity street, Flushing, November 14, in his eightieth year. He had lived in Flushing for 72 years.

Mr. Murray was born in Manhattan, his parents removing to Flushing when he was seven years old. He was educated in the Flushing Institute, and after his graduation, secured employment as a clerk in a Manhattan business house, but remained there but a short time. His uncle, the late Joseph H. King, was conducting the Bloodgood Nurseries on a tract of land adjoining the Murray home on Broadway, Flushing, and took him into the business. He became a partner with his uncle, and the nurseries were conducted under the firm name of King & Murray. Mr. Murray retired from business about 15 years ago. He had been active in civic affairs. During the village days of Flushing, he was for several years a member of the board of trustees, and had also served terms on the boards of education and health. He was one of the founders of the Long Island Savings and Investment Association, and for a time served as its secretary. In religion, he was a Quaker, and for 30 years was superintendent of the Colored Mission Sunday school, on Lincoln street, Flushing. In politics, he was a zealous republican, and had always taken an active interest in the success of his party. Fifty years ago, he married Miss Annie C. Mitchell, who died nine years ago. He is survived by one sister, Miss Mary King Murray, of Flushing; two daughters, Mrs. Edith Mitchell Bradner, wife of Rev. Dr. Lester Bradner of Summit, N. J., and Dr. May Murray Lowden of Flushing, and three sons, Harris King Murray, Charles L. Murray and Ernest M. Murray, all of Flushing. Funeral services were held at his late home, November 15, and were conducted by his son-in-law, Rev. Dr. Bradner.

A. F. F.

Benjamin Connell.

Benjamin Connell was a well known figure in the florist and nursery business of the eastern United States. An acquaintance of over 50 years among his associates left with them an impression of one who gave close attention to business, who possessed a rare knowledge regarding both supply and demand, coupled with an ability to use that knowledge for the building of a very considerable business, chiefly as a dealer. His strict integrity and faithful attention to his duty as he saw it in family, civic and business life, is a credible record sealed by his death, November 9, 1918.

The deceased was born in Ireland, December 7, 1845, and emigrated to this country when a mere boy of 13, and with his parents and other brother and sister, located at Jennersville, Pa., they having preceded him by a year. When quite young, he took a position with the Dinege & Conard Co., and learned the florist business, with which concern he was identified for 30 years. He then established himself in business which he conducted in West Grove, Pa., up to 10 years ago, when he moved to Merchantville, N. J., where he again married. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth F., and by five sons and one daughter by the first union, and a young daughter by second marriage. He was well thought of and respected in the community in which he lived as well as his former Chester county home. He was ill only eight days, the cause of death being influenza-pneumonia.

CONARD & JONES CO.

James Young.

James Young, one of the oldest florists of St. Louis, Mo., passed away in that city November 12, age 69 years. The deceased was born in England and with his father and mother emigrated to Canada in the early fifties. Shortly after they located in St. Louis, the family also embracing two other sons, William and Harry. Shortly after the firm of C. Young & Sons Co. was founded, which has always held its place as one of the leading florist concerns in that community. James Young is survived by two sons, Charles C. and William J. who have been associated in the business, also two sisters, Mrs. William Ellison and Mrs. Dr. Helwig.

The funeral was held November 16 from St. Roch's Catholic church, where solemn requiem mass was celebrated.

The pall bearers were Charles A. Kuehn, Henry C. Berning, J. J. Beneké, J. Houlihan, Dr. Helwig and Matthew Courtney. The home was filled with floral tributes testifying to the high esteem in which the deceased was held by a host of friends. Among the handsome designs was one from the St. Louis Florists Club. William J. Young, who is with the Marine Corps at Paris Island, came home to attend his father's funeral.

J. J. W.

Mrs. Ann Frances Milliot.

Mrs. Ann Frances Milliot, for the past 62 years a resident of Yonkers, N. Y., and for over 50 years actively engaged in the florist business, died at her home in that city, November 14, age 74 years. She was born in France, but came to Yonkers with her parents in 1856. Her father, August Lacharme, was a florist, and she may be said to have been reared to the business. In 1862, she was married to Pierre Milliot, also a florist, and the business has continued until the present, though Mr. Milliot died 17 years ago. In later years, Mrs. Milliot had been assisted by her sons and daughters. They have many greenhouses, and the retail store is the oldest in Yonkers. Mrs. Milliot possessed the characteristic energy and industry of the French people. She is survived by four sons, George, Leon, Louis and William, and by four daughters, Mrs. Johnston and the Misses Mary, Fanny and Margaret Milliot, also nine grandchildren. Her funeral was held at St. Bartholomew's Roman Catholic church on the morning of November 16.

A. F. F.

Mrs. J. B. Boland.

Mrs. J. B. Boland, well-known in the florist trade, and especially on the Pacific coast, having conducted the business of her late husband, J. B. Boland, at 60 Kearney street, San Francisco, Calif., since his death, passed away at her home, October 27. The establishment, one of the most attractive and popular in the Golden Gate City, was conducted under her supervision with a marked degree of success. Mrs. Boland was a woman of unusual refinement and charm, and her passing is a matter of sincere sorrow to a host of loyal friends. The business is being continued under the capable management of Charles Shellgrain.

WORCESTER, MASS.—Walter Currier has installed an oil heating system, which will be tried out this winter as an experiment.

SAYVILLE, N. Y.—Joseph A. Becvar, well-known as a private gardener, and for the past three years in the florist business, died at his home here, October 24, age 33 years.

SPRAYS of holly have been placed in the Christmas packages for the troops overseas and the practice is worthy of encouragement.

LILY growers all over the country appear to have made big money on their cut blooms of L. giganteum, during the recent shortage.

ACCORDING to the New York American, railway freight rates may be again advanced, results showing the 25 per cent increase to have proved insufficient for many lines.

THANKSGIVING.

Advertisers and correspondents will please note that on account of Thanksgiving THE AMERICAN FLORIST will go to press one day earlier next week, and we trust they will mail their copy as early as possible.

Ladies' Society of American Florists.

In the deaths of Mrs. George A. Kuhl and Mrs. Anders Rasmussen, the Ladies' Society of American Florists has lost two of its most valued members. They were of the first to join and by their pleasing personality helped to make the society a success. Many a kind and loving word has the writer had from both at a time when it was most needed and I shall always miss them from our meetings in the future.

MRS. CHARLES H. MAYNARD,
Marion, O.

S. A. Anderson, County Treasurer.

N. A. Anderson, prominent Buffalo, N. Y. florist, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends, both in and out of the trade, on his election as treasurer of Erie county. Mr. Anderson won easily with 40,729 votes against 32,364 given his opponent. The treasurer-elect is one of the city's most public spirited citizens, has been a leader in many movements of a civic nature, and his successful business career will be reflected in the responsibilities of the public office entrusted to him by his fellow-citizens.

Thanksgiving.

Now that the war is over, the trade has much to be thankful for. First that matters were no worse. Many dire predictions were made and appalling situations pictured, that happily were never realized. Aside from the loss of loved ones, heroes, who laid down their lives for their country, all honor to them, the craft has not suffered materially. Those who met the situation bravely with stout hearts and made the most of the opportunities, keeping their organizations as near intact as possible, are now in a position to reap their reward. The situation of the past three years, and the difficulties that have been met and overcome, proves that the craft is equal to almost any emergency, which knowledge is surely cause for general thanksgiving.

War Activities Duration.

Senator Martin has tabulated the duration and conclusion of chief emergency activities of the government as follows:

Control of railroads, 21 months.
Control of telegraph and telephone lines, during the war.
Food and fuel control, end of war.
Espionage act, end of the war.
War trade board and export control, end of the war.

War finance corporation, six months after the war, with further time for liquidating.

Capital issues committee, six months after the war.

Re-organization of government bureaus under the Overman law, six months after the war.

Alien property custodian, end of the war, with extension of time for certain duties.

Government operation of ships, five years after the war.

Aircraft board, six months after the war.

Agricultural stimulation, end of present emergency.

Housing construction, end of war; except for shipbuilders.

Labor employment, during present emergency.

Minerals stimulation, as soon as possible after proclamation of peace.

Greenhouse Insurance in Ohio.

Announcement has been made of the incorporation of the Florists and Gardeners' Insurance Association, with headquarters at Toledo, O., termed a "voluntary, co-operative assessment association" organized for granting insurance to members against loss by fire, tornado, windstorm or hail, the rates charged being based on the nature of the risk. The operations of the association will be confined to the state of Ohio.

The incorporators are as follows: Herman Kehl, of Kehl Bros., Canton; Krueger Bros., Toledo; Edward Hecklinger of Hecklinger Bros., Toledo; Fred Hirtzel, of Hirtzel Bros., Toledo; W. Fitkin, of Fitkin Bros., Toledo; Lewis F. and Herman Miller, of Miller Bros., Toledo; O. F. and A. M. Vischer, of Vischer Bros., Toledo; George M. Seltzer, Toledo, and A. G. Britsch, of Wales Road Gardens, Toledo, Lewis F. Miller, Toledo, is president, and Fred T. Johnson, of the same city, is secretary, the board of directors being composed of O. F. Vischer, Toledo; R. A. Dunbar, Ashtabula; Herman Kehl, Canton; Peter Fornof, Columbus, and Louis F. Murphy, Cincinnati.

STEADIER MARKET HOLDS PRICES FIRM.

The market the past week was steady and prices held to an even keel. While stock in general is in good supply, the prices have been good and the demand equally satisfactory. The bulk of the stock is chrysanthemums, large, small and the pompons and daisy varieties. There has been a noticeable shortage of white in the larger flowered varieties. Carnations continue to improve, but the supply is not enough to bring the price below $6 per hundred, except on the poor grades. Sweet peas are in small supply, but have not as yet become a factor, because of the lack of corsage work. Violets are scarce and command high prices. Calendulas are about the only flower which suffers from lack of demand, but with pompons on the market, there is little call for them. Snapdragons have been short of the demand. Roses have been in fair supply, but the call has been greater than the cut. Good quality roses command big prices. In greens, the market is well supplied.

NOTES.

The joint publicity bureau has mapped out a good programme for the season and expects to accomplish great things. It is to be hoped that the few florists who have not availed themselves of the opportunity to subscribe, do so at once and get in with the workers. Desert from that big army of "leaners" and join the greater army of "workers."

The past week saw a little increase in social work, and it is the general opinion that business along these lines should pick up from now on. We look for a rattling good Thanksgiving business. Stock is not going to be any too plentiful, as many of the growers are practically out of chrysanthemums.

Bouquet Green in Bulk in Stock.

Green Wreathing, Boxwood, Laurel, Mistletoe, Magnolia Leaves, Japanese Roping, Cycas Leaves, Winter Berries, Immortelles, Ruscus and like Supplies.

CHICAGO Vaughan's Seed Store, NEW YORK

Joseph Hill, of Richmond, Ind., spent a day in this city last week exhibiting the new rose, Premier, and selling some of the stock. He took a number of orders from growers in this city and vicinity.

It is the hope expressed by a number of florists that we take an active part in the coming peace demonstration parade, which undoubtedly will be staged shortly after Thanksgiving day.

The regular monthly meeting of the florists' club had to be postponed from last week to this on account of the "Flu." It is to be held at the Missouri Botanical Garden. J. J. W.

BRISK OUT-OF-TOWN DEMAND.

Business has been good the past week especially in the shipping line, which is holding up remarkably well and reminds one of the holiday periods when he sees the boxes stacked up on the sidewalks previous to be taken to the depots. The city trade was rather quiet owing to the unfavorable weather and probably to some extent to the fact that nearly everyone is busy campaigning for the war fund drive. There has been plenty of stock to go around and while at times there was a surplus it was nothing to speak of. Prices in some instances the past week were rather low, especially in regard to American Beauty roses, which sold cheaper than at any other time this season. Carnations continue to command high prices and the same holds true for chrysanthemums and pompons, which have been unusually good property all season. The outlook for Thanksgiving is very bright as far as the demand is concerned, but there promises to be a general shortage of stock if the weather is at all favorable. Chrysanthemums will not be anywhere near as plentiful as last season owing to the fact that several of the growers are now cutting the last of their crops and will have none whatever to offer. Pompons will be in fairly good supply, but, no doubt, will clean up early. It is predicted by many of the dealers that carnations will be in short supply and will bring higher prices than those quoted in most of the Thanksgiving lists. Roses will be quite plentiful, but not in any over-supply, and from present indications will be scarce before the rush is over. Violets should sell well now that the war is over, and the same holds true for orchids, lily of the valley, gardenias, sweet peas and the miniature roses, Cecile Brunner, George Elgar, Baby Doll and Nesbit. Daisies, calendulas, gypsophila, Paper White narcissus, stevia, snapdragons, lilies, callas, mignonette and other miscellaneous stock will be included in the offerings, but not in such great quantities that they should not clean up early. According to many reports chrysanthemum pot plants and other blooming stock will be scarce compared to former years, which should help the demand for cut flowers. Green goods will easily bring the advertised prices and probably advance in some items, judging from the present sales. Everyone will do well to place their orders early so as to avoid disappointment, for it appears as if prices will advance over the advertised quotations and nothing will be gained by the buyer in holding off until the last minute. Play safe—order early.

NOTES.

The National War Work campaign conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic War Council, the Jewish Relief Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association, and the Salvation Army, to carry on the great work of supplying our fighting forces with entertainment, recreation, reading rooms, etc.—in fact, "a bit of home within the camp," and much appreciated comforts on the firing line, closed this week. Allie Zech, chairman of the florists' division, worked like a beaver to realize the trade's quota of $12,500. Some of his committee worked equally as hard but the trade as a whole fell down almost completely. Mr. Zech did remarkably well considering that he took the job at the last minute when nobody else would have it, and surprised even the head of division 19, who knew what he was up against.

WIETOR BROS.

CHICAGO

A break in the soft coal market in this city is expected to be one of the first effects of peace on commodity prices. Already the wholesale price of Springfield and Belleville coal, a low grade product, is 15 to 25 cents a ton lower than the government maximum, which has been maintained on all grades since it was established.

Wietor Bros. are cutting a heavy supply of chrysanthemums and pompons of which they will have plenty to supply all of their customers with for Thanksgiving. Their new pompon, Liberty Loan, is selling like wild fire and is attracting the attention of many of the growers in this vicinity.

W. C. Florentine is now manager of the grower's department at the A. L. Randall Co.'s store, a position that was formerly held by Rudolph J. Mohr, who resigned last week to go into business for himself. Mr. Mohr will have an important announcement to make in the near future.

Guy French and family are back from Three Forks, Mont., where he was manager of a wheat ranch the past summer. The trip to and from Three Forks was made by auto and included a tour of Yellowstone Park.

J. A. Budlong is on deck with a good crop of roses for Thanksgiving in all the leading varieties. This firm's list of roses probably includes the largest number of varieties handled by any one house in this market.

The American Bulb Co. reports business as good and is working overtime to catch up with its orders.

Morris Grossberg, of the Grossberg-Tyler-Finnermann Co., has been on the sick list for several days.

Peter Pearson is again on deck after being on the sick list for over a week.

Mrs. A. Lange is in Omaha, Neb., visiting relatives there.

H. C. Rowe had the family order for the Lehmann funeral which amounted to several thousand dollars and called for a large quantity of American Beauty roses, orchids, lily of the valley, and other miscellaneous seasonable stock. Mrs. Lehman was sole proprietor of the Fair and was one of the best flower buyers in this city, being one of Mr. Rowe's customers for the past seventeen years.

The Excell Laboratories, manufacturers of horticultural specialties, with headquarters at 115-117 East South Water street, are doing a good business with the prominent florists in the trade. One of their leading specialties is Zenke's New Plant Life, which is recommended very highly by all those who have used it. A gallon, which costs $3, will make 200 gallons of solution.

A. T. Fryer & Co., who have been corresponding regularly with Jack Fryers, who is with the American troops in France, have not heard from him for some time, and are somewhat worried over his safety. The last letter received from him was written in September, when he was in the thick of the fighting and had been since July 4.

Miss Marguerite McNulty, who has charge of Peter Reinberg's books, received a souvenir recently from her brothers, Archie and Tom, who are with the American troops in France. The family is patiently awaiting their return home now that they have passed safely through the last big battles on the western front.

Bassett & Washburn will not have many chrysanthemums to offer for Thanksgiving, as mentioned last week, but their receipts of roses will help some to make up the shortage owing to the heavy cuts now. Opbella, Mrs. Chas. Russell and Hoosier Beauty particularly are arriving in perfect condition.

The Chicago Retail Florists' Association is the latest addition to the local trade societies. The association has had several meetings the past month and elected its officers at one held at the Congress hotel, November 19, as follows: L. R. Bohannon, president; A. Lange, vice-president; W. J. Smyth, treasurer, and William Wienhoeber, secretary. The charter membership consists of 24 of the leading local retail florists, who organized for the general welfare of business as a whole. By-laws were adopted at the last meeting. A retail association consisting of such members as this one includes has been talked of for some time and it is pleasing to note that one has been finally organized. Everyone will watch with interest the doings of this association and wish it every success in all its undertakings.

Percy Jones, Inc., are well pleased with business, which continues to be unusually brisk with them in all lines. Chrysanthemums and carnations are arriving in good supply here, considering the quantity offered in this market at present and will be good property for Thanksgiving.

Peter Reinberg is cutting a good supply of roses, chrysanthemums and carnations and will have plenty to supply his regular customers with for Thanksgiving. The shipping trade is remarkably brisk here and new orders are being booked right along.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is cutting extra fine American Beauty roses which are in brisk demand at high prices. Mrs. Chas. Russell of splendid quality are also attracting the attention of the buyers and a good supply of cypripedium are now arriving.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is featuring a large supply of Milady roses which are good property owing to their splendid quality. Mignonette is arriving in good sized quantity at this store.

Kyle & Foerster are strong in stock of all kinds for Thanksgiving, especially roses, particularly fancy Milady in quantity. Pompons and chrysanthemums will be in good supply with them for this occasion.

O. A. & L. A. Tonner received word from one of their growers that he would be in good crop with carnations for Thanksgiving, which is good news to them owing to reported scarcity for this occasion.

Sigmund Misciewicz, son of the well-known Milwaukee avenue florist, was officially reported dead in the casualty list, November 18, having died from wounds received in action in France.

J. C. Craig, the veteran South Wabash avenue florist, is seriously ill at his home. His condition was such, Wednesday, November 20, that his sons were called home from the store.

Ed. Martin's home was visited by the Spanish influenza last week which accounts for his absence at Kennicott Bros. Co.'s store for a couple of days.

L. S. Hines, better known as "Kentuck," is here on business this week. He is foreman of the A. Donahue greenhouses at Omaha, Neb.

North Shore Horticultural Society.

The above society held its regular meeting at Lake Forest, Ill., November 1, President Thomas Head in the chair. There was a large attendance present and after the usual business the election of officers took place, the result being as follows: William Fisher, president; G. Wilson, vice-president; G. Schaffer, treasurer; O. Pettersen, recording secretary; J. H. Francis, corresponding secretary. E. Bollinger, T. W. Head, G. Koppenhoefer, F. Kuehn, E. Bensen, and K. Lofing were elected trustees for the ensuing year.

A splendid exhibition of chrysanthemums was staged by the members. The most striking among the entries was a vase of Nag-ir-Roc, shown by T. W. Head, which was deservedly awarded 100 points in the competition. Other awards were as follows:

Specimen plant of Josephine Foley, exhibited by G. Clarke, 96½ points; four plants of Yellow Turner, exhibited by G. Wilson, 95 points; vase of 12 blooms shown by J. H. Francis, 95 points; one standard plant, staged by O. Pettersen, 90 points. Certificate of merit to each of the following: T. W. INCREASED DEMAND CLEANS MARKET.

Business increased quite rapidly the past week and the market cleaned up each day at reasonable prices. There is no oversupply of large chrysanthemums so prices remain high. The market is fairly glutted with the pompon varieties which are proving very popular and sell readily at good figures. There has been a heavy run on Ophelia roses the past week and growers had hard times filling orders. Violets are very scarce, bringing $1 a hundred. Spencer sweet peas have started to arrive and sell for $2 a hundred. Carnations are arriving in large quantities and move slowly at $2 and $3. Easter lilies and callas are in great demand at $2 a dozen.

NOTES.

B. A. Snyder & Co. have outgrown their present store on Devonshire street and they are taking up larger quarters at 20-22 Otis street, opposite the Flower Exchange, where they will show the trade a large stock of florist supplies, as well as a heavy stock of roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and orchids.

Thomas Roland's Nahant houses have a large stock of pot plants for the holidays, including orange trees, camellias, begonias, ardisias and heather, also a good selection of Japanese rubbers, ferns, and polypodiums.

Frank Edgar, of Waverley, is sending in good Bonnaillon chrysanthemums, also yellow and white Garza plants. He has the best stock of cyclamen plants in Boston for the holiday trade.

The trade extends deepest sympathy to Frank Reynolds, manager for Welch Brother, in the loss of his wife. Floral tributes were sent from all branches of the trade.

Frank P. Putnam, of Tewksbury, is shipping to market a good strain of single chrysanthemums and carnations.

J. M. Ward, of Peabody, is shipping chrysanthemum, cyclamen and begonia plants and a large assortment of ferns.

Gibbs Bros., of Lynn, report a large stock of pink poinsettias, begonias, and cyclamen for the holiday trade.

A. M. Davenport is sending in begonias, ferns and large specimen poinsettias and camellias.

Mrs. W. H. Ward, of Montvale, is recovering very slowly from her long illness.

CLUB MEETING.

The regular meeting of the florists' club was held November 13 at the Hotel Statler. A good attendance of the members cordially greeted the chief speaker of the evening, J. Austin Shaw, of New York, who spoke reminiscently of his last visit to this city 19 years ago when the Society of American Florists held its meeting here. He marveled at the wonderful development of the "City of the Straits" during that time in a commercial sense, and was delighted to find that the florist business had progressed in even a greater ratio than would be expected. He found by an inspection of the florist establishments that they excelled in size and equipment those of eastern cities of equal size. He regretted to note, however, that in that period following the convention in 1899, many of the florists who were that year full of health and vigor and youth had passed away. Among them were John Breitmeyer, S. Taplin, Andrew Ferguson, Frank Beard, Gus Taepke, Henry Truck and B. Schroeter. He spoke interestingly of the New York Florists' Club and its work, and of the wholesale and retail stores of that city. He predicted the most successful meeting here next August of the S. A. F., both in point of attendance and the result of the proceedings, which he said would necessarily include much work incident to a new regime following the end of the war which has so greatly interfered with the development of the florist industry and brought financial ruin to many who had formerly flourished in the business. A rising vote of thanks was given the speaker for his pleasing address. Mr. Shaw is on his way to Los Angeles, Calif., where he will spend the winter with his wife and married daughter, Mrs. Harvey Thew.

A dozen ladies, members of the Detroit Florist Club auxiliary, were present at the meeting, having concluded their own meeting in the afternoon at the residence of George Davis. This was the first joint meeting of the two clubs, and the advantage of such a combination was happily suggested by the participation of the ladies present in the proceedings. The address made by Mrs. A. J. Stahelin revealed her intimate knowledge of the growing end of the business and rare ability to state her views.

Robt. Rahaley, Thos. Browne and A. J. Stahelin, who had visited the E. G. Hill Co.'s establishment at Richmond, Ind., the previous week, gave interesting descriptions of this trip and the splendid appearance of the novelty rose, Premier, as seen growing there. Joe Marks, of Chicago, who was present, told of some of the trials of the trade in the "Windy City" during the influenza epidemic.

Wayne McLaughlin, John Bleeker and Albert Winkler were voted members of the club. M. Bloy and C. H. Plumb were added to the local committee having in charge the permanent display gardens for the S. A. F.

J. F. S.

WALTHAM, MASS.—The L. J. Reuter Co., jobbers in plants, seeds and bulbs, has opened an office at 329 Waverly Oaks road, this city. It is planned to have another office in Boston early in the spring.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SUPPLY WEAKENS.

It was expected that chrysanthemums this year would be plentiful, as the growers had planted heavily with the expectations of closing their houses when the crop was off on account of fuel restrictions. Up to this time, however, there has not been enough to supply the demand and it is said there may be a shortage for Thanksgiving, as many houses are practically cleaned up. This is due to the unusually heavy call during October when most of the stock was cut tight and many of the retailers were getting stock from the greenhouses and the wholesaler who has handled the crops every season heretofore got "stung." Again, some of the retailers found fault with the wholesalers because they were unable to get the stock they required. So it seems that wholesaler is the "goat" any way you put it. One instance is known where the grower told the wholesaler that he did not make a shipment on a certain day as he sold his carnations at the greenhouse at $5 per 100. Several days later he sent in shipments and his net returns were over 6 cents. Since that time he has not missed a day. However, at this writing business continues good but has moderated somewhat from the rush of several weeks ago. There is a shortage of good pink and white chrysanthemums, but a good supply of yellow is on hand. Bonnaffon and Chadwick are the best now available. Ivory is about done for the season. Maud Dean and Helen Frick are the best in pink but the supply is limited. There is a good offering of roses and carnations. American Beauties have dropped in price due to light demand. Lillies are almost off the market and lily of the valley is seen only in small amounts. Violets go very slow. Pompons are very popular.

NOTES.

Miss Gertrude Becker, who has been with the McCallum Co. as a member of the office force for the past six years, has the sympathy of many friends in the loss of her mother, who died November 15.

Earl Hunkele, of the McCallum Co., has the sympathy of the trade in the death of his father which occurred November 11.

John Kiel, of East Liverpool, O., is cutting some of the finest Turner chrysanthemums seen in this section.

GOOD SUPPLY AND SATISFACTORY TRADE.

Business is good. Receipts are sufficient for immediate requirements, but as Thanksgiving approaches there are signs of the supply shortening considerably by the time that day arrives. Shipping business is holding up well. Prices are good. The cut of roses is good, fairly large and meets with a good market. Carnations are selling well. Chrysanthemums have been in a good supply and have been meeting with a good call. This is equally true of pompons. Among the latter some extra fine Diana have been available. Easter lilies are somewhat scarce, but some callas may be had. Sweet peas are selling well. Single violets meet with a good demand. New bronze galax is now in the market.

NOTES.

The Christmas fund committee have collected over $500, and this week are sending the respective quota to each man who is overseas. Those who are in this country will receive their's just before Christmas. The committee will then make a full report.

G. Brunner & Son, at their range on Price Hill, have a crop of splendid carnations that will well repay a visit and prove something to be remembered for some time.

Lawrence Kresken is a candidate for director of the Young Men's Elaine club. He is the first candidate to start out to hustle and should be elected.

George Klotter has been cutting some excellent Diana and Major Bonnafton, which have sold quickly at L. H. Kyrk's place.

C. E. Critchell received the first of his supply of new bronze galax last week. The stock is excellent.

Visitors: Al Barber, Cleveland, O.; G. W. Frisch, Dayton, O.; W. Johnson, Memphis, Tenn., and Miss Fannie White, Lexington, Ky.

William Koenig says that he has not been doing much for the past six months on account of the poor outlook for coal, but now that the war is over, he feels encouraged and is starting up again.

J. H. Fiesser, of Hamilton avenue, has a fine stock of plants, consisting of dracenas in variety, poinsettias, primroses, ferns and an assortment of other stock.

In addition to roses, R. Williamson is growing good stock of pink bouvardia, and Asparagus plumosus manus.

THE BOOK OF GLADIOLUS

THE first authoritative book on this bulb ever printed in America, or possibly the world, issued April 1, 1911. This 120-page book, written by Matthew Crawford and Dr. Van Fleet, contains many chapters covering all sides of growing, propagating, storing, etc., and also some pages of valuable cultural notes gathered from reliable sources. A necessity for both amateur and grower. The book is bound in cloth and fully illustrated.

THE LEO NIESSEN CO., 1201 Race St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Philadelphia.

MARKET RECOVERS AFTER WEAK START.

The first few days of the past week, were, as one of the wholesalers put it, "pretty punky," but the windup on Friday and Saturday saw a very good cleanup. While the supply of carnations is increasing, there has been quite a shortening up in the rose crop, which is to be expected at this time. There is, however, enough to supply the demand in all the varieties at satisfactory prices. There are very good Russell, Francis Scott Key and Columbia, which with Ophelia and Double White Killarney, is about the assortment to be seen in the best flower cases. The eight cent carnation did not materialize the past week as predicted, but it is said will soon be here, as the quality is rapidly improving. Chrysanthemums are holding out better than expected. The stock has seemed short all season. Some good judges said they would be over, perhaps, before Thanksgiving. Now it is said they will hold out in fairly good variety, bringing, if a demand develops as is expected, record prices. Good old Bonnafont still sets the pace. It is seen in much larger quantities, and is in greater demand than any other sort. Maud Dean is also an old-timer that has stood the test and is always a first choice. There is a good supply of pompons, which sell well. Sweet peas, which will be a great factor this season, are seen in quantity and are meeting with ready sale. Easter lilies are backing up a little, owing to the normal death rate which now prevails. Nearly all the demand for lilies is for work of this character. Calendulas are now one of the standard stocks which will be pushed this season. There will also be plenty of snapdragons, judging from the quantity now in. Violets are equal to the demand, as are cattleyas and oncidiums.

PACKAGE SERVICE COST INCREASES.

The package service, by means of which much of the stock of the growers within a radius of 25 miles of the city has been sent to this market, and which was found a great accommodation, while still in existence, has within the past two years had to stand a great increase in rates. Going into effect November 1, a box that for years was carried for ten cents, and last year raised to 20 cents, now costs 30 cents, plus 3 cents war tax. Leo Niessen states that parcel post special delivery costs no more, while the package service only includes transportation on the trains.

It is to be hoped now that Uncle Sammy has taken over the express service, and the necessity for right of way for war material is over, that even better than the pre-war transportation conditions will prevail. This should give great encouragement to all branches of the trade. It may take some time to properly organize the service, but at any rate, embargoes will be done away with, and officials can be approached, who will treat the recommendations of the trade with some consideration.

NOTES.

The first of the many big events that will take place the coming year to celebrate the victories of the war and chitects and engineers, at which 800 persons were seated. Decorations were American Beauty roses, chrysanthemums, palms, silk bunting and flags. It was very well done and much admired. The Habermehl firm also had a lot of funeral work for Nixon, the theatrical manager, whose prominence in the theatrical world brought many out-of-town orders.

We are sorry to have to report another influenza victim. William Sible, a bright young man of 23, who handled the John Walsh Young stock, and who joined the colors last spring, died on a transport on the way to France, October 11 and was buried at sea. He was a good salesman, active and quick to sense the market. He was a man who will be missed.

Business at the Leo Niessen Co.'s store is reported to be fair for the season. Leo Niessen believes there will be sufficient chrysanthemums for all demands at Thanksgiving. As regards the supply in general after that, time will tell. Exceptionally fine Chadwick and Eaton chrysanthemums are features here.

Thanksgiving business is looked forward to as giving, in the demand, a fair idea of what is to be expected for the Christmas holidays. The general consensus of opinion is that the trade will have all they can attend to and those who are prepared with good stocks will profit accordingly.

The Robert Craig Co. is having a good demand for their cyclamen. They have never had them quite so well done in every respect. Plants in eight-inch azalea pots, with a spread of 24 inches and countless numbers of buds, are not often seen. Their poinsettias are also particularly fine.

Charles H. Grakelow, who has been recuperating at Atlantic City, where a stay of two weeks did him a world of good, visited the market November 15. He is all right now, but had a very close call. His store force managed a wonderful business while he was laid up.

Reid's "all right roses" were the feature of last week's stock at 1619 Ransstead street. Carnations are also a factor. Robert Bragg is on the job again this week, after a five weeks' illness.

Roses are a bit off crop with the Jos. Heacock Co. just at present, but Carl Coats says, "Look out for us; we will soon be coming strong."

Frank Ross, who can see the difference between a nickel and a dime at first glance, says that the difficulty with many storekeepers is their inability to distinguish a gross from a net profit. When their eyes are open to this detail, they commence to make money.

Chrysanthemums, as well as good roses, are quantity stocks with the Philadelphia Wholesale Florists Exchange. Good in spots, is the business report, with week-end cleanups.

Partridge berries are now in the market. These are good sellers if properly handled. Planted in a fern dish, they add a touch of color that gives life to the otherwise sombre green.

Berger Brothers are strong on chrysanthemums and carnations. Snapdragons and violets are also features. Business is a little slow but all right.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are featuring a Kris Kringle figure vase, like their Valentine Kiddies, which should make a good Christmas novelty.

FAIR BUSINESS BUT PRICES ARE LOW.

Business was quiet in the wholesale district during the past week, and excepting in orchids and American Beauty roses, the tendency of prices was downward rather than upward. There was considerable buying every day, but the wholesalers found it hard work to clean up. The weather has been exceptionally fine for November, cool nights but usually clear and mild days, which brought in heavy stocks of chrysanthemums, carnations and tea roses. It was good "violet weather," but violets did not move well. There was an abundant supply of lilies and lily of the valley, but both were rather slow. In carnations, there was excellent stock of Wards, Benoras, Matchless and other varieties, for so early in the season. Stevia is now beginning to come in, and is popular with the retailers for mixing in bunches of carnations. Quantities of marigolds are on the market. At a time when there is a scarcity of other flowers, they go very well, but at present, when there is so much stock that is more attractive, they are a drag. In this city, fine autumn weather is not favorable to the trade. It brings in heavy supplies and takes the flower buyers away on auto trips or some other form of out-door recreation and amusement. But there are no grounds for complaint. The florists, as a rule do not expect any unusual activity until Thanksgiving. Then the workers for the united war funds were very active during the past week, and if they got some money that would have otherwise gone to the florists, there should not and will not be any faultfinding. There will be plenty of fine stock for Thanksgiving, and with continued fair weather, we may expect a great improvement in business.

November 18.—The near approach of Thanksgiving has raised prices on violets and the best are wholesaling at $1 per 100. The growers, as usual, are holding them back. There was heavy rain last night, and the weather is now warm and sultry, which is not favorable to business. Heavy shipments continue to arrive and the market is sluggish.

NOTES.

In the garden section of the New York Sun of November 17, which is conducted by Edward C. Vick, there is an article on "Roses With German Names." Reference is made to a letter read at a recent meeting of the Horticultural Trade Association of Great Britain and Ireland from the New York Rose Society, (?) "suggesting general action to change the names of all roses of German origin." The writer concludes as follows: "There is confusion enough as it is with names in the plant world. What is needed is to eliminate varieties that are quite similar under different names. Let us not add to the confusion by changing names of plants that are well known in commerce, and above all, let us not deny ourselves satisfactory plants and beautiful flowers on account of their German names or origin." In part, we agree with the above. There are many questions to be settled that are of greater importance than the naming of roses. The German names of such roses as Frau Karl Druschki and Gruss an Tepitz have nothing to do with the war. Further, they are reminders that before the German people were inflamed by their leaders to an insane desire for power by armed conquest, there were those among them who studied peaceful arts. It will take a long time for the German people to win back the respect of the civilized world, which they once enjoyed, but they may receive a measure of it speedily if they show fruits of repentance. In the meantime, let the names of the roses remain as they are until we learn more of the spirit of the German people.

Captain Joseph B. Greenhut, who died at his home in this city, November 17, aged 75 years, was a man of varied activities and among them was an interest in the sale of plants and cut flowers. The "Big Store," the department store located on Sixth avenue, extending from 18th to 19th streets, of which he was the head, maintained, on the roof, up to the time of its closing early in the present year, a conservatory for the care and sale of flowers and plants. It is stated that some years ago, when the shopping district was in that part of Sixth avenue, he had plans for an elaborate flower market, but the up-town movement of business caused them to be abandoned, and also brought financial troubles to his firm. Captain Greenhut was born in Austria, came to this country with his parents, who settled in Chicago, when he was nine years old; attended school in Chicago and is said to have been the second man in that city to respond to President Lincoln's first call for volunteers.

When in doubt, protect the hop-toad. It has long been known that the toad was a powerful enemy to bugs and other destructive insects. Now comes a Boston man, a railroad conductor, who says that he brought a toad by his train from Saugus to Wakefield, 10 miles, and in two days that toad was back on the lawn of the Saugus railroad station, having hopped the 10 miles back. To make sure, he had tagged the toad before turning him loose at Wakefield. How is that for intelligence? There are cases on record where members of that superior race, the human family, could not find their own front doors after walking 10 blocks. We believe that the toad is, in fact, might soon put some of the manufacturers of insecticides out of business and thus save the farmers, gardeners and florists a lot of money.

The United States fuel administration issued a statement, November 9, telling how to use steam sizes of anthranine feet, which was for the bier or casket supports to rest on. It was made of orchids and white chrysanthemums. Wallace R. Francis, well known in the trade of this city, is manager of the flower store.

It points out that No. 1 buckwheat can be burned in the ordinary furnace with shaking and dumping grates if a bed of ashes is allowed to accumulate and sufficient draft is maintained. During periods when furnaces operate below capacity, steam sizes of coal can be used to supply the necessary amount of heat. Such coal can also be used at night, thus saving domestic sizes of anthracite. A mixture of steam sizes of anthracite can also be used with semibituminous coal in steam plants. Proper mixing, however, is most essential.

In the matter of bankruptcy of Isidore A. Fight, individually and John R. Walsh, copartners trading as Anglin & Walsh Co., the receiver therein has filed his report with the clerk of the United States District Court and the same will be offered for hearing in the office of Referee in Bankruptcy Seaman Miller, 2 Rector street, this city, on November 24, at 1:15 p. m., at which time recommendations may be made.

Mrs. George Vocke, wife of a well-known salesman, with the New York

Cut Flower Co., died at her home in Richmond Hill, L. I., November 12, after a short illness of pneumonia, aged 28 years. She is survived by her husband and one son, four years old. Many fine floral designs were noted at her funeral from members and employees of the New York Cut Flower Company.

One of the finest retail stores of the Harlem section of this city is that of the Lenox Florist, 312 Lenox avenue, at 125th street. There is always a fine window display of the best in cut flowers and plants, the store has a constant run of trade, and their work in designs and decorations is artistic.

J. K. Allen, 118 West 28th street, is receiving a large and varied supply of stock. Noteworthy are his Russell roses. In chrysanthemums and carnations he is also well abreast of the times.

Miss Florence Cadieux, of the Cadieux Company, Madison avenue and 77th street, who had a serious attack of pneumonia, is now fully recovered and attending to business.

The store known as the Broadway Florist, 2004 Broadway, has recently been placed under new management and is showing fine features in plants and cut flowers.

M. C. Ford, 121 West 28th street, is handling a good stock of American Beauty roses, carnations and chrysanthemums; also a fine supply of chrysanthemums in pots.

D. Fexy, 118 West 28th street, is handling a good stock of Chadwick and Bonnaillon chrysanthemums. A. F. F.

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

BULB dealers have had the most trying season on record, due to bulb and labor shortage.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.—The Valley Seed Co. has moved into more commodious quarters at 1019-1023 Tenth street.

LIEUT. GORDON BOYD, stepson of Charles Dickinson, of the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago, was killed in action, October 5.

THE new Canadian weight standard governing seeds sold in the Dominion establishes clover at 60 pounds and timothy at 44 pounds per bushel.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. W. Edmundson, of the California Seed Growers' Association, San Jose, Calif.; H. L. Coffin, of the Woodruff-Boyce Seed Co., Seattle, Wash.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade November 20 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.75 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

THE gladiolus harvesting season this fall has been especially fine, both east and west, weather conditions being ideal. All growers have had to utilize the help of women and children.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. — The Stratton-Ladish Co. will build a $60,000 warehouse, an addition to its present seed establishments to cost $40,000, and an $11,000 office building.

BULBS to the value of $52,016 were shipped from Amsterdam to the United States during the quarter ending September 30. Seed exports were $25,819 during the same period.

Dealers and growers who are only partly supplied with Dutch bulbs are much interested in the cargo of an English steamer arriving at New York this week with several consignments.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover opened 30 cents higher November 18, closing at $25.40, a gain of $2.10 during the week. Cash timothy was 30 cents higher, selling at $5.35; December, $5.45; January, $5.55, and May, $5.65.

CHATHAM, ONT.—The Dominion Sugar Co. paid over one million dollars, November 16, to sugar beet growers who delivered their product here. Vilmorin's Improved and Klein's Wanzleben produced good crops.

HURST & SONS, London, Eng., have issued a list of novelties and specialties in flower seed for 1919, included in which are new double white Primula malacoides alba plena, Schizanthus May Blossom and Calceolaria Buttercup.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Henry A. Dreer, Inc., opened their store to general business, November 18. All bulb orders have been packed, leaving them only Paper Whites, a wonderful sale. A folding telescope, heavy cardboard box, is used for all small orders, this feature allowing close packing.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association met at the Hotel Bristol, New York, November 15, and selected Chicago for the 1919 convention city, the date to be announced later. A tentative programme was arranged and the association's finances were discussed, which will lead to an amendment of the by-laws being offered at the convention. There were present besides the president and secretary, Howard M. Earl, Kirby B. White, E. L. Page and Leonard H. Vaughan, of the committee, and S. F. Willard, Charles P. Guelph, A. Lee Don and David Don on invitation.

Southern Seedmen's Association.

MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Southern Seedsmen's Association was held at the St. Charles hotel, New Orleans, La., November 11-12, for the purpose of formulating plans for the spring trade. Louis B. Reuter, of Chris. Reuter, New Orleans, president of the association, occupied the chair with the following members in attendance: R. B. Buchanan, Memphis, Tenn.; John Baldini, New Orleans; John Bollwinkle, New Orleans; Frank S. Love, Montgomery, Ala.; Peter Mangano, New Orleans; J. L. Mitchell, Jacksonville, Fla.; John L. Mosby, Memphis, Tenn.; H. B. McMichael, Tampa, Fla.; Fred I. Meyer, New Orleans; L. V. Pace, Mobile, Ala.; Joseph Stechler and Richard Stechler, New Orleans; P. M. Wensel, Natchez, Miss.

Among the important subjects which came up for discussion during the session was the supply of southern field and garden seeds, a comparison of pro rata crop deliveries to members, the importance of greater export trade to Central and South America, the settlement of disputes between members through the medium of an arbitration committee, the issuance of a wholesale and retail valuation sheet for the guidance of members in market values, and the problem of securing an adequate supply of sound acclimated seed to meet the spring demand in the south, as an aid in producing sufficient food to assist in relieving the situation as regards the starving millions in Europe through their reconstruction period. C. D. Wilcox, of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, was among the speakers of local and national prominence, who addressed the members at the banquet.

More than 18 members have been added to the association's roll since the last meeting. The next meeting, which will be general in character, will be held at Montgomery, Ala., in May, 1919.

Farmer Seed and Nur. Co., Faribault, Minn.

The Farmer Seed & Nursery Co., Faribault, Minn., has completed extensive improvements at its plant. An entire story has been added, giving increased floor space of 740 square feet. New cleaning machinery, automatic scales and electric elevators are among the improvements. Special equipment for curing of seed corn, in which the company specializes, has also been installed. A spacious new office now occupies the entire second floor.

In addition to the improvements at the main plant, the company has erected a downtown seed store at the corner of First avenue and Fourth street, to care for the seed trade exclusively.

New York Seed Trade.

The bulb season is nearing the end, and seedsmen seem to be pretty well sold out. Several have advised that they have been turning down orders.

Several of the visiting seedsmen, attending the meeting of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League and of the executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association, visited the local stores. C. E. Kendel, secretary of the last named organization, was around, November 15, looking up bulbs.

Fred Cowperthwaite is having success with his seed and plant department at the Macy store.

Burlap Prices.

The war industries board has agreed to continue in effect until May 1, 1919, maximum prices on burlap and bags originally intended to be effective from October 4, 1918, until February 1, 1919. Negotiations are under way for a price on burlap under government control which will be effective in United States markets after May 1, and will show a decline of about 25 per cent from present maximum prices.

Brown Bag Filling Product Available.

With the release of the Brown Bag Filling Machine Co., Pitchburg, Mass., from its contract for putting up government rations of soluble coffee, minute gelatine, salt and pepper in individual portions, the seed trade has been freed from a threatened menace. With two million men in the field to be supplied daily, it looked for a while like the absorption of the firm's product.

Movies to Aid "More Food" Campaign.

An average film release of about 1,000 feet per week is being arranged for by the United States department of agriculture, to extend over a period of six months as an aid in next spring's drive for increased food production. Practically all sections of the country will be represented and the following subjects will be included: Solution of farm labor problems; control of animal parasites; the great wheat fields of the Pacific northwest; harvesting cantaloupes and potatoes; drying fruits and vegetables, etc.

Government Food Drying Industry.

Establishment of an industry within the United States to dry fruits and vegetables as a means of conserving the food supply of the nation is one of the important projects started by the department of agriculture under authority conferred in the regular agricultural appropriation act recently passed, according to the Weekly News Letter.

An appropriation of $250,000 is included in that act to enable the secretary of agriculture to determine the best means and processes of dehydration, and to disseminate information as to the value and suitability of dried products for food. Authority is given to establish and operate plants for drying fruits, vegetables, and other edible products for supplying food for the army and navy, if such action is deemed necessary by the President. Co-operation with commercial drying concerns is also provided.

The secretary of agriculture has designated an advisory board to administer this appropriation and outline and control the work to be done under it. The advisory board is to consist of representatives of the bureaus within the department of agriculture which are concerned with food production, regulation, and conservation, and of one representative each of the food administration and of the sanitary corps of the army.

Vegetable and Fruit Markets.

Reports of the bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture for the period November 12-18, indicate moderate movements with the general price tone stronger. The slight declines of the preceding week in potato shipping sections was shared during the period in many consuming markets although losses were not heavy. The general tone, however, is weak. Minnesota and Wisconsin No. 1 sacked white stock held in the main at $1.70 per 100 pounds for carlots at Chicago, but the range of sales to jobbers in midwestern markets weakened slightly to $1.85-$2.40 per 100 pounds sacked. Minnesota Red River Ohio declined 15 cents at Moorehead, closing at $1.40-$1.45 per 100 pounds trackside. New York round whites declined 10 to 15 cents. The onion market was fairly steady with prices stronger in shipping sections than in city markets. Rochester, N. Y., quoted choice yellow stock 10 cents higher at $1.50-$1.60 per 100 pounds sacked. Northampton, Mass., reported a firm tone with a top figure of $1.65. Consuming markets weakened slightly. No. 1 sacked yellows ranged principally at $1.35-$1.85, a few markets reaching $2. Cabbage was fairly steady with few important general changes. New York Danish seed held mostly at $12-$14 per ton bulk f. o. b. Rochester and ranged steady in consuming markets at $15-$25 but several localities showed declines. New York domestic stock sold at $12-$18 but weakened in Philadelphia to $5-$10. Wisconsin Holland seed sold unchanged at $14-$16 per ton in the Racine district but declined slightly in midwest markets, being offered at $16-$20. Bean shipping sections quoted nearly steady prices, but values tended upward in the distributing markets. Michigan choice hand picked ranged $7.50-$7.75 cash to growers in shipping sections and held at $10.50-$11.50 in consuming markets. California small whites ranged $9.00-$9.50 to growers and $10.50-$11.50 for consumption. Colorado pintos held at $6 per 100 pounds at shipping points and $7.25 at Kansas City. In celery, Michigan No. 1 white stock ranged 14-16 cents per dozen at Kalamazoo and strengthened to $3-$3.65 for 7's and 8's at St. Louis. Turnips and carrots continued to move slowly. Sweet potatoes continued to advance, Virginia Big Stem Jerseys reaching $5-$6 per barrel in leading markets.

Apple markets showed a stronger tone with the price trend generally upward. Prices were as follows, f. o. b.: New York Baldwins, A2%, $4.75-$5 per barrel; Baldwins and Virginia Yorks, A2%, $5-$6; Virginia Ben Davis, $3.25-$3.75; Northwestern boxed Winesaps $1.75-$2.15; Colorado Jonathans, $2.75-$3.25. Cranberries were steady, ranging in leading markets at $7-$8.75 per barrel for early Massachusetts varieties and $8-$11 for late.

Illinois First Great Apple Show.

Under the auspices of the Illinois State Horticultural Society, the Illinois First Great Apple Show opened at the Morrison hotel, Chicago, November 19, the exhibition continuing four days. The show was a most comprehensive one and is interesting as a new departure in educating the general public to the importance of the state as one of the greatest apple producing sections in the country, although not more than 25 per cent of the apple acreage within its boundaries receive the attention the industry justifies. Represented at the show were about 100 orchards, and the stock, despite very unsatisfactory growing conditions during the past season, showed prime quality, comparing favorably with the product of the northwest. The displays were well staged, the entries being divided into divisions for booth exhibits, baskets, barrels and boxes and plates and trays. Included in the varieties were Akin, Ben Davis, Grimes, Black Ben Davis, Jonathan, Greening, Minkler, Salome, Rome Beauty, Stark, and York Imperial.

A special feature of the show was the demonstrations as to the proper care of orchards and there was also an extensive display of insecticides, spraying machinery, packages, etc.

Included in the programme is an "apple banquet," which will be held in the Terrace Garden of the Morrison hotel. Thursday evening, this attractive amusement spot having been practically turned over to the visitors for the occasion, the regular programme of entertainment being augmented by several numbers of unusual prominence.

Secretary A. M. Augustine of the Illinois State Horticultural Society and other officials who have worked untiringly in the interest of the exhibition for several months, express themselves as well pleased with the interest manifested both by growers and the general public, with the result that the next exhibition will embrace a much wider scope both as to size and territory represented.

Broad-Leaved Evergreens.

The colors which the leaves of a few of these assume in the autumn add greatly to the beauty of these plants in November. The most conspicuous change of leaf color on any of these plants is on the Rocky Mountain ma-honia (or berberis) repens. From light bluish green the leaves turn to pale violet color in the autumn. This is one of the handsomest and hardiest evergreen plants which can be used here to cover the ground under larger plants; it grows only a few inches high, spreads rapidly by underground stems, and the bright yellow flowers are large and conspicuous. It is unfortunate that eastern nurserymen have not yet learned the value of this plant. The small dark green leaves of the box huckleberry (Gaylussacia brachycera) become in the autumn deeply tinged with red when the plant is fully exposed to the sun, and the leaves of Pachystima Canbyi are more or less tinged with violet. These are two of the rarest plants in the United States, being known now only in two localities, the first in Pennsylvania and the other

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telephone protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

in West Virginia where the pachystima has not been seen, however, for nearly 50 years. The leaves of Leucothoe catesbaei often turn deep bronze color in the autumn. This plant which has always been considered hardy in eastern Massachusetts, suffered seriously during the winter. Most of the plants lost the ends of their branches and their leaves, and many were killed outright in a particularly favorable position for this shrub where it had been established for nearly twenty years. The rhododendrons are in good condition and generally well furnished with flower-buds, and the laurels (Kalmia latifolia) have not before in the Arboretum given such promise of abundant bloom.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, November 7, 1918.

HAMILTON, ONT.—Peter Bros. have opened a flower shop on King street.

WORCESTER, MASS.—The chrysanthemum show for the benefit of the Red Cross, held in this city under the auspices of the Worcester County Horticultural Society, was unsurpassed. Among the most noteworthy displays were those of A. N. Pierson, Inc., of Cromwell, Conn., with a rare collection of foliage plants, Randall's Flower Shop and H. F. A. Lange, of this city.

Pueblo, Colo.

NOTES.

John Pastorius, formerly gardener for Mrs. Margaret A. Thatcher, has taken the post of florist at the State Asylum for the Insane, succeeding Charles Stuckwisch, who has been called in the draft.

Gerhard Fleischer, this city's pioneer florist, has been very busy with funeral work during the recent epidemic. Frank Sauerwald, the competent manager here, has been turning out some very artistic work.

Mrs. Frank Sauerwald has purchased the Colonial Flower Shop, formerly conducted by Mrs. Charles Stone, but has been seriously handicapped during the recent busy season by being on the sick list.

The chrysanthemum show at the city greenhouse in Mineral Palace park brought out some unusually fine flowers. The local Red Cross realized over $1,000 from their sale.

A son has been born to Charles Haskett and wife. The father of the young American is at present in the field artillery with the United States forces in France.

The sympathy of the park and greenhouse employees' union is extended to city forestry foreman Frank A. Lundberg in the death of his son Clarence.

George Lane, for eighteen years florist at the Mineral Palace park conservatories, is now a "granddaddy"—and he is still in the draft age. J. P.

SCARCITY OF STOCK NOTICEABLE.

There is a different aspect to the market this week, as flowers are not nearly so plentiful, especially roses, and the high-tide of chrysanthemums may be said to be passed, as only very large blooms are coming into the market of the season's latest varieties. Carnations are quite a bit on the short side, and it is thought by many of the retailers that the growers are saving much of their stock in roses, carnations and chrysanthemums for the Thanksgiving day trade next week. The outlook for this holiday is indeed good, but far as the demand is concerned, but with the absence of chrysanthemums, or only a few of the higher priced varieties to choose from it is thought there will be considerable difficulty in filling orders. Pompons are still quite plentiful, and these and the chrysanthemum plants are going with a vim. Prices on all flowers are expected to be high for some time to come, as it is not likely that things will assume their pre-war status for at least a year. The supply of greens is still scarce, here, and prices on many varieties have advanced.

NOTES.

A number of the retailers staged Victory windows last week, that of A. J. Lanternier being especially good. An excellent display of chrysanthemums was shown, with a dove of peace perched on the handle of an artistic basket arrangement in the center.

A Victory window, with a large flag of immortelles as the center feature, was noted at the store of the Freese Floral Co. This firm is receiving some very fine Shawyer and Ophelia roses from their greenhouses at New Haven, Ind.

W. J. & M. S. Vesey are having a record out of chrysanthemums and cactuses, and report the stock in good shape for Thanksgiving. Funeral work, and general out-of-town demand has been splendid here.

Some handsome specimens of the chrysanthemum Tekonsha, were shown in the Wenninghoff flower shop last week. A brisk counter trade was reported here.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS RULE THE MARKET.

Florists' displays are now gorgeous with chrysanthemums of all colors and varieties. Consumption is exceeding that of any previous season, but has been scarcely large enough to take care of the supply. Late blooms have come in prematurely, and some florists have resorted to special sales to relieve the glut tendency. Prospects are that there will be few chrysanthemums left for the Thanksgiving trade. Preparations are being made to substitute pot plants for that event. Cyclamens and primroses will be plentiful. Carnations are a large yield and of fine quality. The same is true of sweet peas. Roses are equal to all demands. The crest of the abnormal funeral business has been passed, but this feature of the trade is still large. With the receding of the influenza epidemic social work is increasing in volume, and florists are kept busy. Short labor supply is still a handicap.

CLEVELAND, O.—The J. M. Gasser Co. has added a motortruck of good capacity which will transport stock from its Rocky River range to the store in this city.

CLEVELAND, O.—Walter E. Cooke, secretary of the florists' club, who was stricken with pneumonia at Newark, N. J., in October, while on an eastern trip, is now well on the road to recovery.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Primulas.

As fast as the primroses grow, space them out so that there is a good distance between each plant, and so that the leaves do not touch, allowing room between the plants for a free circulation of air. If the plants are placed on a bench with a front and back board, place boards across and set the plants on these or stand the pots on inverted pots so as to bring them up into the air. Take care in watering not to wet the foliage more than necessary, or the leaves will be spotted. Many good primulas are ruined by being overcrowded and the foliage allowed to remain damp. If the plants are not going to be in flower for the holidays they can be placed in a temperature of 60° at night for a short time, which will rapidly bring them along, but do not attempt a higher temperature than that, nor for any great length of time. These plants are cold-loving subjects and are more satisfactory in a house that never goes above 50° at night. Primula obconica is now blooming freely and can be kept in bloom until spring if grown cool. These plants are particularly useful in filling Christmas baskets. Care must be taken in the handling of these plants by persons who are at all subject to poisoning from coming in contact with this, rhus, or other poisonous plants, for they sometimes cause a very troublesome and irritating eruption of the skin.

Ardisias.

The berries of the ardisias should now be turning a bright red and the foliage taking on that beautiful glossy appearance which makes this plant so popular at the holidays. Where these plants are grown in great heat the berries do not color as brightly, and the leaves lack that thick, leathery texture and glossy appearance, and the plants are not so satisfactory in the houses. They also chill very easily, and if this happens the berries drop off. It is much better to finish them from this time on in a bright, sunny house, with good ventilation; this will tend to color up the fruit and give the plants a much healthier appearance, and they will prove more satisfactory. We have seen these plants, where grown cool and not forced, hold their berries until the next year's crop was borne. Keep a sharp lookout for scale on ardisias; they quickly get covered with the brown scale unless carefully watched, and when these insects appear constant washing is the great remedy. Clean off the first that appear. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

Catch Crops.

With the close competition that the greenhouse man is up against at the present day it does not pay to have any of the bench room idle, or if a crop shows that it is not going to succeed and be remunerative it had better be thrown out and the room occupied by something that will pay. The several different plants and flowers have their seasons, and when they are done a succeeding crop should be all ready prepared to take the place. It therefore pays to have some catch crop ready in cases of this kind. There are many annuals that can be grown and carried along in small pots and if not used and eventually discarded the loss is small. These, if planted out in the benches, will bloom in the early spring and give a very welcome variety to the flowers of that season. There are many flowers grown today that were first grown as catch crops, such as the antirrhinum. Among others which might be grown this way are the centaureas, either bachelor's buttons or sweet sultans, nasturtiums, lupines, calendulas, eschscholtzias, salpiglossis, schizanthus, stocks and others. There are also many of the early blooming perennials which can be lifted and heeled in where they can be easily obtained during the winter and transplanted to the greenhouse. Among these are Coreopsis lanceolata, Aquilegia corulea, gaillardias, heuceras, sweet william, and others which the grower has in stock. A dealer will always find customers who appreciate these flowers, which are often not seen during the winter months, and by having the stock of a few of these odd things one can often plant out a section of a bench that otherwise would not be returning any revenue, and thereby prevent loss.

Stevia.

The early stevia will now be coming into flower, but if the plants are in pots, and there are a good large number, they should not be brought into flower all at once. By keeping some of the plants in a cool location they can be retarded so that plants may be had in bloom up to February. A house or deep frame where the night temperature can be kept just above the freezing point will hold them in check and they can be brought in as desired. The dwarf variety is very easily handled in this manner, but the tall plants are not so easily moved around. Keep the plants well tied up for the joints are very brittle and break down easily, and the long variety should be very carefully handled even after the sprays are cut, for they break down with their own weight when in flower.

Cold Storage Lilies.

Cold storage giganteums in small bunches, can be forced and handled most economically, planted in wooden flats or shallow boxes about 12x18 inches in depth. These hold 15 bulbs and when planted, they are placed along the edges of the walks, under the tables, are easily watered, do not upset or fall over into the passage, there is no breakage as is liable with pots, and they are more quickly moved about when necessary. Another advantage is that four stakes in the corners of the boxes, with a string around, ties up the whole lot. To get the best results at this season from cold storage lilies, the temperature must not get much below 65 degrees. They must be kept constantly on the go from the planting of the bulbs until the cutting of the flowers. Green fly is their greatest enemy, which is often found even when the plants appear clean, down in the heart of the shoots or stems as the buds are forming. If not immediately overcome by smoke or nicotine, the result is no buds, or only such as produce defective flowers. Many a crop has been lost by neglect of this important detail.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

Now that the first of the season's holidays is past, one can gather from the results some idea of what to expect as to the volume of trade during the coming busy months, and lay plans accordingly. To anticipate the demand, and be ready with the first of the season's flowers, creates business; all sails should now be set to catch as much as possible, prior to the event, of the coming holiday trade.

Stores in all lines are already strongly featuring their Christmas goods and advising early purchases, which seems to be the rule this year more than ever. Florists cannot get into the competition for this trade any too soon. A well arranged plant basket or two, a few choice evergreen or other lasting Christmas wreaths, specimen flowering berried or fruit bearing plants, all nicely decorated with appropriate ribbons, in a window display or featured in the store, will remind shoppers that their lists will not be complete without gifts of this character.

If not already ordered, the selection of flowering and foliage plants for the holiday business should be made at once. Go over last year's record of the Christmas business, with its lists of plants, plant baskets and other details of this department. Determine what will be required, make out the full list, and then visit the growers. Purchase only the finished stock, the choice of the various grades, plants that will be full of flowers and at their best on the day of sale. The perfect plant in any size, is almost sure to find a purchaser, while the seconds are too often found in the left overs.

All kinds of greens should also be engaged well in advance. The dealer is sure to give such early orders the preference. Ground pine is frequently snowed under in the first weeks of December, and there is often none for late comers. The choice highly colored, cut evergreen sprays, from the nurseries, should be secured before the severe frosts of December turn them brown. There is nothing of like character more beautiful than wreaths of this material.

There should be in every shop a novelty table: a space by itself either on the end of the counter or a small table in a conspicuous part of the store. A few tumbler or small vase baskets prettily filled, a baby shoe with Sweet-heart roses, two or three miniature colonial bouquets with narrow ribbons, such as may be worn as corsages, a small basket of fruit and flowers, labeled "For the convalescent," etc., all ready to be picked up and carried away. It is not much trouble to keep up such a display, which is sure to attract attention. The artistic appearance and the "take me" appeal of these ready made arrangements, effects many sales.

Work up a fernery service. The filling of these little table ornaments can be made quite an important branch of the business. While each transaction is small in itself, it oftentimes leads to the opening of accounts which are well worth while.

Be careful about prices; as the season advances the figures climb week after week, and sometimes in between, there must be a carefully graduated scale to meet this condition, or there is loss instead of profit. Nothing should be left to chance. There should be as little waste as possible. While nothing that is not in good condition should be allowed to go out of the store, the bright salesman will show the things that are most plentiful, and keep the scarce articles for the customers who will take nothing else. Flowers that are a bit passe are put away to be used up in design work where, particularly with open roses, they show to better advantage than the fresher stock.

How about the F. T. D.? Are you a member of this live wire organization? If not, get in at once and rub shoulders with these hustlers of the craft. It will put your store on the map, and if you feature and work for this out-of-town business, a lot of it will be sure to come your way.

Co-operation Through Florists' Clubs.

Paper by George M. Geraghty, Toronto, Ont., read at the annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association at Ottawa, Ont., August 13-16, 1918.

Co-operation in any line of business is the one and most important item in the successful conduct of business, and the florist is vitally concerned in this item.

As we are geographically situated so far from the large import centres, this co-operation is a necessary factor in the purchase of stock and sundries. Retailers are the ones who are more interested than the growers, and, for that reason, where it is possible, and there are three or more retailers, florists' clubs are the logical result. To cite a point, I will refer to the Toronto Retail Florists' Club as an example. For many years the retail florists of Toronto have gone along their own way and did well, but there was something lacking. A few years ago some of the retailers suggested forming a florists' club, but interest was wanting and nothing came of it. A little over a year ago, one of our energetic young men, J. J. Higgins, decided that co-operation in the form of a florists' club, was necessary, and with a few loyal helpers called a meeting which was held in St. George's hall. On this occasion enough interest was manifested to warrant going ahead with the organization and another meeting was called and Dunlop's hall was the birthplace of one of the most progressive and congenial florists' clubs in the country. At this meeting more than three-quarters of the retail florists of Toronto paid their fee, and the start was made and officers elected. At the next meeting, a month later, we had every retail florist in Toronto as a working member and all dues and fees paid up.

Summer coming on, adjournment was made until the second Monday in September. At this meeting every member was present and co-operation was the theme. Previous to this time, it had been the custom to hold a chrysanthemum show and award prizes. Suggestion was made to have each member have a show of his or her own in their own places of business, all using the same advertising, with stickers, fillers or inserts alike. This was enthusiastically carried, and I do not think there was ever more interest manifested in any show than was in this. Here again co-operation told, not only with the retailers, but with the growers as well. Where previously growers sent in some show chrysanthemums in hopes of getting a prize, they now sold them at a good price, and I believe every grower around Toronto and western points disposed of every salable bloom and at a fair price. This will be repeated again this year and, we believe, with greater success.

Next, we took up Christmas advertising, and co-operation again held its own. All members again used the same publicity and the whole city and adjoining country was flooded with Christmas notices. The results were more than expected and so it was on all subsequent holidays. Let me mention the first florists' picnic in July of last year. The street car strike came on that day, and a severe rain storm, but for all that almost 200 attended and had a most enjoyable time, and here let me add that co-operation in this case resulted in every florist store in Toronto being closed on that afternoon and I am sure that such a thing has not happened anywhere else, or if so, I have not heard of it. The same thing took place this year, when we had a great crowd and a most enjoyable time, due mostly to the efforts of the club ladies in providing a most excellent supper. Our lady members believe in co-operation. To show how successful we are I may say that we have money in the treasury, a fine club room (due to the generosity of J. H. Dunlop), where we have social and business meetings and a general good time.

One of the most important things we have done is to suppress fake advertising. I will not enter into the details of this matter, but the firm in question made all amends possible and we can ask for no more. In conclusion, let me urge upon Canadian florists the necessity of co-operation and the furthering of their own interests by that method. The Toronto Retail Florists' Club is anxious to have other retail florists of Canada affiliate with them, and at some future date they will be a power in the business world of our country.

National Association of Gardeners.

BOSTON CONFERENCE.

The gardeners' New England conference, held under the auspices of the members in Boston and vicinity of the National Association of Gardeners at Horticultural hall, that city, November 22, was called to order by Wm. N. Craig, acting as chairman, who in a stirring patriotic address called attention to what the United States and her Allies have recently achieved, but warned that there is still much to be home gardeners, so that as much as possible of the country's general production can be released to the suffering nations. In the discussion that followed, it soon became apparent that the impression prevailed in many communities that war gardens were a thing of the past and not to be resumed next year. After learning how urgent it was that this work be continued, the members present, who had been actively engaged in this work, pledged themselves to renew their efforts, and a motion was unanimously carried that done before the world democracy becomes a reality. In his remarks, Mr. Craig referred to the wonderful services rendered by the war gardens, but stated that this work, also, is not completed, as production and conservation in the next few years will be as necessary as at any time during the war. He outlined the programme of the evening, briefly referred to the several subjects to come up for discussion, and then read a letter received from Robert Weeks, of Cleveland, O., president of the national association, regretting his inability to attend the conference, and mentioning some of the problems which will confront the gardeners during the post-war period, recommending them to the conference for consideration.

Mr. Craig introduced H. D. Hemenway, of the national war garden commission, Washington, D. C., who announced that the planting done in the war gardens during the last two years will be taken up this coming year by the victory gardens, as it is more essential than ever that food be produced. F. O. B. the kitchen door. The speaker presented some figures of the amount of production and the number of gardeners engaged in war gardens, which were astounding in their enormity. He made the statement that unless the United States provided food for Russia next year, starvation would be widespread over that country, and that official records show that thousands and thousands of people, among them principally children, starved to death in the streets last year. Other countries must be provided for, but Russia appears to be the greatest sufferer through the halting in the crop cultivation. It was stated by Mr. Hemenway that the national war garden commission is planning a campaign to increase, if possible, the production of food by the National Association of Gardeners co-operate in every way possible with the national war garden commission in furthering the campaign they have under way, and that individual members of the association interest themselves in the work in their respective communities by offering their aid wherever they can serve.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar, who requires no introduction to a Boston audience, was called on by the chair to speak on the effects of plant import restrictions on American horticulture. After relating his several visits to Washington to protest against the proposed restrictions, and the evident disposition of the federal horticultural board to put the proposed restrictions into force, Mr. Farquhar stated that American nurserymen were already growing plants, some of them of better quality than the foreign product, of varieties that it was believed a few years ago could not be produced in this country, and that in time other varieties would be produced. The speaker agreed, that while it might even be a good incentive to increase production among American nurserymen, the time limit of the plant import restrictions should be extended to give American nurserymen opportunity to prepare to meet the demand for their stock that will be occasioned by closing the doors to foreign plants.

Leonard Barron, of New York, said that he had been endeavoring to discover just how American nurserymen stood on the question of plant import restrictions, and that his investigations proved that they were somewhat divided in the matter; that he was disposed to believe in the long run it would be a good thing for American nurserymen, though he believed that more time should have been given to prepare themselves against the restrictions. In the discussion which followed, it was claimed that if American nurserymen would turn to the cultivation of our native plants, it would be possible to develop truly American gardens. The opinion prevailed, however, that until the nurserymen can furnish such plants, there should be some modification in the restrictions on foreign plants, and the secretary was instructed in a motion, duly carried, to learn if it were not possible to have some action taken to have the proposed restrictions deferred for at least three years.

A general discussion followed of the problems which the gardener will have to contend with during the reconstruction period, and the difficulty he will have in obtaining capable assistants, as many of the young men of the profession who joined the colors, will turn to more lucrative vocations. The question of training young men in this country was discussed, but the difficulty of interesting them in the work, due to the small inducements that must be held out, was considered a decided factor against succeeding. The substitution of young women, who though accredited with achieving much in the war work, was not favorably regarded. That the gardeners' compensation is not at all commensurate with that of other professions, was generally agreed on, but it was contended that many gardeners are themselves responsible for this condition. The cultivation of greater confidence between the estate owner and the gardener, it was agreed, would be of much benefit to the men of the profession.

M. C. Ebel, secretary of the national association, pleaded for a more united co-operation between the gardeners through their national association in order that many of the problems that now confront them may be overcome, and that their profession may receive the recognition, it is entitled to, from among those requiring the services of those engaged in it.

The conference, which was well attended, was pronounced a success.

SUPPLY APPEARS LIMITED.

The market is rather short on stock and prospects for a good supply for Thanksgiving are rather slim. The demand is very heavy and everything is selling at top prices. Shipping business is very good. The rose supply has dropped considerably during the past fortnight. All carnations coming into the market are cleaning up quickly at good prices. The chrysanthemum cut has shortened greatly and is far below the normal cut of past years for the days immediately preceding Thanksgiving. Easter lilies are more plentiful than they were for a fortnight. Callas may be had. Sweet peas and single and double violets are all finding a good market. The call for orchids has picked up considerably. Stevia is now in the market and is proving a welcome addition to the daily receipts.

NOTES.

The Christmas fund committee has begun to send out postal money orders to the florist boys of this city and vicinity who are in the service of the United States, either military or naval. The list includes the following: Overseas—Sergt. Clifford Merland, Corporals Arthur J. Gear, George F. Popp, Edward Foran and Otto H. Walke and Wesley Gear, Joseph Grimmer, Fred R. Murphy, William H. Deller, Paul Nabert, R. H. Schlomer, Arlington A. George, George Farrell, H. J. Kramer, Harry A. Gray, John Mensch, Ernst Steelman, Edward Thomas, Sam Zellner, Edson P. Kittle, Elbert C. Kittle, Fred E. Wiegler, Henry Rutenschroer, Harry Neckstroth, George Epely, Willard E. Eller.

John Palmer and Edwin A. Geiser. In this country—1st Lieut. C. B. Jones, 1st Lieut. Ray H. Ruttle, 1st Lieut. Herbert Thaden, and Joseph L. Baer, George H. Kessen, William J. Stein, Robert Ruttle, Ben. J. George, Sidney George, Frank Herb, U. C. Brunner, Charles Windram, Ed. Cavanaugh, Lawrence Schlomer, Roy Greensmith, Leo Kenninger, George H. Trautman, Harry Rutenschroer, Jos. Durban, Joseph D. Thomas, Charles Garvey, Bernard Decker, J. L. McDuff and Clarence Pfeiffer.

Three large houses at Eden Park are filled with flowers which the park florists take pride in showing to throngs of interested visitors. Chrysanthemums occupy quite a prominent place, among the most attractive being Dolly Dimple and Petite Marcel.

Roy Rudolph has been sending some fine large pink chrysanthemums to C. E. Critchell's. They have been selling well.

George Klotter is cutting some excellent stevia. H.

FINE THANKSGIVING TRADE ANTICIPATED.

Trade in this city continues to be very brisk in all lines. Funeral work still is very heavy and the chief outlet for flowers is in this line. There is still a very large supply of all kinds of flowers. Chrysanthemums are still very plentiful and are selling well. Good prices are now being received by both grower and retailer. The Yellow Major Bonnaffon and Appleton are best. Good whites are none too plentiful, Nonin being the best offered. Good pink chrysanthemums are to be had at most of the stores. Large lots of pompons are coming in, but they move slowly. Anemones are over after a very successful season. Carnations of first grade quality are scarce and in good demand. There is quite a heavy cut of short stemmed stock, nearly all of which is used for funeral work. Roses are quite plentiful and are bringing fine prices. Russell is improving in quality every day, with not enough first grade stock to go around. Few, if any, American Beauties are to be seen. Haddley is the best to be had in red. Aphelia and Mrs. Shawyer are the leaders in pink. Cecile Brunner is in heavy demand with the cut shortening considerably. The first cut poinsettias of the season arrived during the week and they give the stores their first holiday appearance. As yet, they are not in much demand, but for window displays they are unexcelled. Cattleyas are quite plentiful with the demand heavy and prices very firm. Gardenias are in short supply. There is no lily of the valley on the market. Violets are in oversupply, owing to ideal weather conditions. The giant violet, which is the principal shipping variety, is in good demand for long distance orders, but the call for Princess of Wales is limited. We noted quite a few tuberose and Paper Whites this week. The latter sold well. Erica melantha and obvata have made their appearance in the market and are just as popular as ever for basket work. Cut cyclamens are very abundant, and for wedding bouquets take the place of lily of the valley almost entirely. Adiantums are getting to be in short supply. There is always a steady demand for Adiantum. Williamsii, which is one of the most beautiful of the adiantum family. Asparagus is getting scarce also. Prospects for a heavy Thanksgiving business were never better than they appear at the present writing. We do not think there will be a shortage of anything. Chrysanthemums will be in large supply and of fine quality. In pot plants, some excellent cyclamens are coming in early. Ericas in pots will also be offered largely. Poinsettias promise to be in large supply. The quality of the Boston ferns being sent in to the market is splendid. The florists have arranged for generous supplies of both plants and flowers, and with the passing of the influenza epidemic, it is expected that a record business will be done.

NOTES.

P. V. Matraia, president of the Art Floral Co., had a very large church decoration at the Memorial Chapel at Stanford University last week. It was a very elaborate affair and great quantities of stock were used. On the return trip to this city, one of his large motor trucks developed tire troubles, but with the assistance of a machine from the Lynch Nursery Company of Menlo Park, he was enabled to reach a town, where the necessary repairs were made.

A visit to the plant growing establishment of Eric James at Elmhurst was a revelation. The cyclamen houses never appeared to such advantage as they do this season. All the holiday stock is in the finest possible shape. Mr. James is busily engaged shipping stock for Thanksgiving trade. He is also of the opinion that the coming season is going to be a banner one for the trade in all lines.

Manager J. A. Axell, of the E. W. McLehann Co., says Thanksgiving orders have been the heaviest for years. This firm is in with a very heavy cut of roses in all varieties with the exception of American Beauty. They are also shipping heavily of chrysanthemums.

Avensino Bros. are greatly pleased with the amount of business they have done. Funeral work has been an important item with them. They expect social affairs will use large quantities of flowers from now on, as the influenza epidemic is over.

Henry Goetzheim is in with a fine cut of Col. Appleton chrysanthemums. This is one of his specialties, and he grows several houses of it every season. Business is fine at his retail store.

Manager Chas. Shellgrain, of the J. B. Boland store, is making a fine display of poinsettias this week. His stock is especially well grown and is attracting much attention.

C. Kooyman says fall trade has been very good with his firm. He says the call for all florists' supplies has been brisk. He also handling a large supply of cut flowers.

M. H. Ebel, of Sacramento, was a visitor during the week, arranging for his Thanksgiving supply of flowers and pot plants. He tells us trade is very good in his city.

Schwerin Bros.' greenhouses, which are devoted principally to ferns, are in good shape for the coming season. This firm is one of the largest growers of ferns on the coast.

At Joseph's, business has been very good right along. They are showing cattleyas in large quantities and report a fine demand for this flower.

Pete Ferrari, of Ferrari Bros., is rapidly recovering from his recent illness and expects to leave the hospital shortly for his home. JAMES T. LYNCH.

Lancaster County Florists' Association.

The meeting started with a visiting trip, somewhat hampered in numbers on account of the labor situation, but there was a round dozen of us and three machines. The first stop was made at the establishment of H. D. Rohrer, where we found the usual good stock of carnations, nearly all Supreme and Matchless, a house of sweet peas, one of calendulas and myosotis, and a number of houses filled with chrysanthemums, principally Bonnaffon, and one with Seidewitz and Dolly Dimple, both in top quality shape. In addition to the cut flower business they are large growers of primulas and had them, as one of the party remarked, by the million. They had one bench of cyclamens well set with buds and flowers and a bed of callas that had been moved over from the establishment of Lemon Landis before the fuel situation had settled. Mr. Landis having his houses planted to winter vegetables.

The B. F. Barr greenhouses were next visited, and here we found the usual display of stock grown to supply his large retail trade at the store, pot plants of all sorts and in every stage of growth, carnations, roses and chrysanthemums, all of high quality, especially the chrysanthemums, of which he will have an unusual supply for Thanksgiving. The new boiler house is a model of efficiency and almost fire-proof. In the nursery end of this place, a tremendous business is being worked up both locally and for shipping.

Rudolph Nagle's was the next stop, and here we found the chrysanthemums about all cut, with mignonette, yellow daisies, myosotis, calendulas and snapdragons started for the winter supply of cut flowers, as well as several houses of sweet peas, among which is an extra fine white sport of Yarrowa that he expects to work up into a regular stock. Here we also found a number of houses of lettuce in various stages of growth.

Enos Kohr's was the last place visited, and here the chrysanthemums also were cleaned up and the houses will be run without heat for the winter. His immense carnation houses were planted to three varieties, Matchless, Mrs. C. W. Ward and Alice, a perfect sea of buds and the cut has been enormous all through October, so if there is any one in this section will make money out of carnations this season it is our friend Enos. The help problem is partly solved by the employment of women for tying, cutting and disbud-ding the stock.

The evening meeting was held in the store room of B. F. Barr, our regular place having been commandeered by the war work committee. The paper for discussion was the one written by Mr. Pollworth on the "Commission House of the Future," and was discussed by the various members, the consensus of opinion being that the grower and the commission man should be in hearty co-operation with each other all the time, and plantings should be discussed and decided a year ahead whenever practical. M. J. Brinton gave us what he is pleased to call a rambling talk, but which is always full of good advice. He thought that the past year had taught us all to get more out of our places with less expense, and that many hitherto undiscovered leaks would be eliminated and work for better efficiency in the business. He also emphasized the fact that it was not good business policy to invest your money in new glass as fast as it is made, but to have some in reserve for just such occasions as we have experienced the past year.

The club invested from its treasury $300 in Liberty Bonds which made a pretty near 100 per cent showing. M. J. Brinton recommended that the club get in touch with W. G. McAdoo and write a petition asking for better express service for cut flowers and plants, said petition to be signed by every member of the club. This was unanimously agreed to, and it is hoped every club in the United States will follow suit.

A "victory social session" will be held in the Brenneman building December 10, with A. F. Strickler, Lemon Landis and H. K. Rohrer managing it. There will be bowling, billiards, pool, cards and "eats." ALBERT M. HERR.

SMALL VARIETY IS OFFERED.

With the chrysanthemum and pompon supply about over, the market is left rather short of stock. The last chrysanthemums were received this week, and there are very few for Thanksgiving business, which it is believed will bring a greater demand than in former years. The call for roses, carnations, lilies, stevia and violets is rather heavy, as a result of the shortage of other flowers, and with the dark weather, there is liable to be a shortage for some time unless conditions improve. Carnations have not been in oversupply at any time and the demand continues brisk, $8 being the price maintained for good stock. Some shorts sell at $4. American Beauties, which have not been selling well, have taken a slight advance and the prospects are that they will continue to hold up in price during the period of scarcity. There are no long stemmed flowers on the market. Lilies are very limited in supply, but larger shipments are looked for soon. A limited amount of lily of the valley is being received and it moves well at $8 per 100. Violets are slow in moving, partly on account of poor quality. The first shipments of stevia and snapdragons were received this week. Greens of all kinds are selling well, with only a limited supply. Boxwood and other Christmas stocks are moving fast and the trade is preparing for good holiday sales.

BIG THANKSGIVING DEMAND IN SIGHT.

Business has not been as brisk as usual during the past week but all indications point to an excellent Thanksgiving trade and roses, chrysanthemums and carnations are being held back for the occasion. At this writing the rose supply is light and prices hold firm. American Beauty is scarce and Francis Scott Key is taking its place. Ophelia and Columbia are also good sellers. Lilies are very scarce. Violets are plentiful but the quality is poor. Carnations are excellent and retail at $1.50 per dozen. Pompons are in great demand and show fine form. In chrysanthemums, Turner, Enguehardt, Eaton, Davis, Bonnaffon and Chrysolara are plentiful and the call for them is heavy. A few snapdragons and calendulas are still to be seen in the shops. The new crop of galax, fine in quality and color, has arrived. Greens are plentiful.

NOTES.

The ladies auxiliary of the florists' association were entertained recently at the home of Mrs. E. P. Wilson and discussed plans for the coming year.

F. Schlegel & Sons report an excellent demand. They recently cut one entire house of Chrysolara, which were used exclusively in funeral work.

The Rosery Flower Shop has an attractive display of helichrysum in small baskets suspended from a ribbon covered hoop.

George J. Keller, of Mt. Hope avenue, has been cutting excellent chrysanthemums and pompons in addition to cyclamen plants.

At Salter Bros.' main store, they are showing attractive Christmas novelties, one of which is a bird house of unique construction.

J. B. Keller Sons have redecorated their store on Clinton avenue, white being the color throughout.

C. W. Curtis, of Irondequoit, is cutting fine stock of pompons in bronze, yellow, pink and white.

BUSINESS GETTING BACK TO NORMAL.

An unprecedented amount of funeral work keeps the florists on the jump for stock enough to fill orders; the flu and pneumonia shortened the staffs so that at times it was impossible to get the work out and at some of the stores orders were turned away. In the meantime, the epidemic has abated and conditions are becoming normal. The much abused grower has come back to his own, and anything that he happened to have brought good prices. As one of them remarked, "We are coining it now." Stock compares favorably with other seasons, and in roses some good blooms are being cut. Ophelia, the florist's rose, is in grand shape. Reds are scarce, and in fact all teas at $10, $15 and $20 per hundred are not plentiful enough to fill orders. American Beauties, with the best at $50 per hundred, are almost impossible to get, and chrysanthemums are about over. They had a good run while they lasted, with prices about 50 per cent higher than in other years. The best carnations are now listed at $8 per 100, with the cheaper grades, $6 and $5. Violets are $1.75 and other stock in proportion. In supplies, it has been almost impossible to keep up a full stock, and prices are as changeable as the winds, no quotations being recognized.

NOTES.

The Gardeners and Florists' Club held its annual show in St. George's hall, but lacking the support of the commercial growers, who did not have enough stock to fill orders, the entries were not as numerous as usual. While some criticised the lack of entries, the officers understood conditions and staged what they had to best advantage. Geo. Thompson was first in collection, three of any variety, vase of pompons, vase of singles, and specimen bloom besides getting a special prize for an artistic basket. Geo. Hollis was awarded a diploma for a seedling pompon of bronze type deeper than Mrs. Beu, with quilled petals. W. McNaughton received a diploma for his seedling yellow single, Bessie McNaughton. These officers for the coming year were elected: H. G. Dillamuth, president; G. H. Mills, first vice-president; F. D. Clarke, second vice-president; Alex. Simpson, secretary, 11 Queens Park; Geo. Hall, treasurer. Executive: T. Manton, Frank Fletcher, John Woods, Geo. L. Douglas, L. P. Whitlock, Geo. Thompson, E. F. Collins representative to the Canadian national exhibition, T. Manton.

MAJORITY OF STOCKS SHORT IN SUPPLY.

The offering of stock during the opening of the week has been quite plentiful, but the market tightened at the close. Roses are advancing steadily, but they sell as fast as they are received. From indications, chrysanthemums will be short in the larger sizes for Thanksgiving, but there will be plenty of small flowers for sale. Carnations are in limited supply and many more could be sold if available. Violets are good and there are plenty of them. Pompons sell well. There is a shortage of good pot plants, but ferns sell well.

SHREWD growers have lately increased their forcing bulb orders, anticipating a good winter demand for all cut flowers.

It will help florists on coal bills if they will double retail prices now on all greenhouse decorative and flowering plants, and charge for cut flowers generally, what the business will stand. It has been a lean summer.

DEPARTMENT OF PLANT REGISTRATION.

Public notice is hereby given that A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., submits for registration the new geranium here described:

Geranium General Pershing.—Single; Color, vivid salmon, shading to light salmon-pink towards the petal edge; foliage bronzy green, medium size; compact in growth and extremely free and continuous in flowering, hence an improvement on existing varieties in this color for bedding or decorative purposes.

Any person objecting to this registration, or to the use of the proposed name, is requested to communicate with the secretary at once. Failing to receive objection to the registration the same will be made three weeks from this date.

DEPARTMENT OF PLANT REGISTRATION.

The following varieties have been presented for registration and unless objections are filed with the secretary of the society within three weeks of this publication, the registration will become permanent:

By M. H. Walsh, Woods Hole, Mass.
Name: Nokomi. Class: Wichuraiana. Parentage, Wichuraiana x Comte de Raimbaud. Description: Climber with light glossy green foliage; hardy and free of growth. Flower larger than Lady Gay or Dorothy Perkins, of dark rose-pink color, in clusters of 25 or 35 blooms, double and slightly fragrant. Superior for its hardiness, vigor, foliage and size of bloom.

By the E. G. Hill Company, Richmond, Ind.

Name: Victor. Class: Hybrid tea. Parentage, Ophelia x Killarney Brilliant. Description: Upright, strong, free growth, with large, deep green foliage. Flower large, deep rose or often red in color, semi-double. The bud is extremely long and the flower has a strong fragrance. Full petalage and a good keeper. The variety is similar to Killarney Brilliant, but shows an improvement in size.

Name: Golden Rule. Class: Hybrid tea. Parentage, Ophelia x Sunburst. Description: This variety is similar to Ophelia in all characters except it is a clear yellow in color. It is a stronger grower than Sunburst.

Name: Mme. Butterfly. Class: Hybrid tea. Parentage, Ophelia Sport. Description: This variety is similar to Ophelia in all characters except that its color is greatly intensified.

National Publicity for Flowers.

One month now to the end of the year. We are nearly $5,000 short of the $50,000 required to put the 1918 stage of our campaign over the top—or, had we better say, to the top?

Our committees have every reason to believe that subscriptions to complete the fund will not be wanting, and are going ahead with the programme already laid out. Why? Because the reports coming in to our promotion bureau are such as to make even the man with cold blood enthuse. East, north, south, middle west and west, the feeling is that our publicity has had the effect of stimulating business to a remarkable extent. If it was possible to accomplish this result in times such as we have just passed through, what are we to expect in the better times which are before us? Already florists are asking why we did not start a campaign before. The answer is easy—we were not organized for the effort. Now, through the generous contributions of a large number of whole-hearted florists, we have approached a point where we may well consider ourselves organized, and our work is having a telling effect. We want to keep going. We want our slogan "Say it with Flowers" to be continually in the public mind, and we are proceeding in the right way to accomplish it.

But we must have the requisite funds to fully attain our object. We have had to anticipate the little shortage we are complaining of. Surely there are enough good souls among the large number of florists, who have not yet subscribed, to help us over our goal. No matter whether a retail florist or a grower, the fund is worthy of support. It should be remembered that some florists have contributed as much as $500. There's faith for you. And these same florists are satisfied that they have had their money's worth in increased business. The more money, the more publicity, and the bigger the volume of business.

Help now, when help is most wanted. Take advantage of our direct aid service. Use the newspaper electrotypes we have provided, and connect your establishments with the magazine advertising. Display our signs, and popularize our slogan in your community. Our Christmas advertisement in a number of national magazines will bring business to your door, if you will run our newspaper electrotypes in your local newspapers. Send us a dollar and one will be mailed to you right away. Get your advertising going early, and you will not want for Christmas trade.

JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

Cottage Gardens Acquire Stark.

Charles W. Ward, president of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, Eureka, Calif., writes as follows, November 19:

"I desire to inform you that William P. Stark, formerly of Louisiana, Mo., has associated himself with the Cottage Gardens Nurseries. Mr. Stark takes the position of operating manager and sales director and will have entire charge of the production as well as the selling end of the business. He will dispose of his interests at Louisiana, associate himself permanently with the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, and give it his entire time and attention."

"Mr. Stark is too well known to the nursery trade to need any introduction from me. He has made a thorough examination of the Cottage Gardens properties and has concluded that there is a great future in store for its business."

Wire Situation.

In no department of steel manufacture are conditions more nearly on a peace basis than in wire and wire products. The Pittsburgh Company, which less than a month ago was 100 per cent on government orders, today is practically 100 per cent on regular commercial business.

Chicago makers and dealers in wire designs are weeks behind on their orders. Wire has been unobtainable but may loosen up soon. It is not a question of wire alone, but of skilled labor.

FOOTBALL MAKES THE BIG DEMAND.

This is Thanksgiving week, and the week for the regular football contest between Vanderbilt University and the University of the South at Sewanee. For years these two champion football aggregations from the two universities have contended for mastery and the game has become celebrated all over the south and visitors come from long distances to witness the play and local feeling runs high. This local feeling extends to the florists, who in growing the queen of flowers, the chrysanthemum, always put in a special cord to cater to the game, yellow chrysanthemums tied with black ribbon for Vanderbilt, and white chrysanthemums, tied with purple ribbon, to represent Sewanee. Vanderbilt naturally has all the local sympathy, but the Sewanees bring along enough of their friends and rooters to make it exceedingly interesting and the florists gather in the shekels and hustle from early morn to dewy eve, for it is an opportunity to boost a big day's business and they smile and are satisfied. The war activities and interests have interfered somewhat, making other more thrilling matter to entertain the public, but now that peace has been forecast, the old-time enthusiasm will come to the fore, and the florists are standing in status quo with a great big stock of magnificent flowers to greet the day and help out the enthusiasm. There is a bare possibility that the day will not equal former years, but the florists are ready just the same. Outside of the football game as a flower day, Thanksgiving day would fall flat, as the table decorations and home uses calls would not be very large and the florist might go home and eat his turkey to reflect and nap it out afterwards, but with the game on, he will hustle around his store until after three o'clock in the afternoon, and be satisfied with a pocketful of cash in lieu of a hot dinner. Chrysanthemums, carnations and roses are the chief supply in cut flowers at the present time, but they are amply sufficient to supply all demands. Trade has returned to normal lines and continues good though with no extraordinary rush. Pot plants in cyclamens, solanums, primulas and quantities of chrysanthemums are in good demand. There has been an ideal fall as far as the weather is concerned, and the flowers are arriving in great perfection.

HEAVY DEMAND FOR THANKSGIVING.

The early demand for Thanksgiving was exceedingly heavy this year, consequently stock in all lines was scarce and cleaned up early at high prices. Business about the middle of last week was so brisk that inferior stock, which had accumulated for some time, was disposed of completely at surprisingly good figures, leaving the market bare at the end of the week, for the stock that arrived for the Thanksgiving orders. The weather was none too favorable for the grower last week but took a change for the better November 23, which was the first clear day experienced for some time. The mercury tumbled to below freezing, November 23, when it registered 26 above at 7 a. m. This equaled the record for a late November freeze and seemed to be the kind of weather that the retailer needs for everyone was busy on that day and report very satisfactory sales. The shipping trade was heavy on Monday and Tuesday, November 25-26, when some of the wholesalers found it impossible to fill all their orders in full owing to the scarcity of stock. Chrysanthemums were in fair supply but cleaned up quickly at the advertised quotations and in many instances higher. Pompons had a brisk call and probably never brought such good prices at Thanksgiving before as this year. Carnations were very scarce and fancy stock brought as high as $8 per 100, and in a few instances as much as $10, but the buyers were in no hurry to pay this price only when absolutely necessary. Roses were exceedingly scarce except in the longer stemmed grades which cleaned up at high prices owing to the general scarcity of stock. American Beauty roses were in good demand all week and so were Mrs.

Chas. Russell, Columbia, Milady, Hoosier Beauty and, in fact, every one of the varieties grown for this market. Lily of the valley was scarce, also orchids, gardenias, sweet peas and other corsage flowers including violets, which seemed to be in shorter supply than ever this season. Daisies, mignonette, calendulas, snapdragons, Paper White narcissus, lilies, callas, and other miscellaneous stock had a good call, and like everything else, were cleaned up at the time of going to press, Tuesday, November 26. The early city demand is very good and with favorable weather, all the late cut stock should clean up completely in all lines which everything points to and was predicted in these columns the past few weeks. Green goods are in strong demand.

NOTES.

The florists' club will meet at the Hotel Randolph, Thursday evening, December 5, at 8 p. m., when the election of officers will be held. Elmer D. Smith, of Adrian, Mich., the well-known chrysanthemum specialist, has promised to have some of his novelties on exhibition which will be worth while inspecting.

Wietor Bros. had a splendid Thanksgiving trade which was one of the best in years, owing to their large supply of stock, particularly chrysanthemums and pompons. The out-of-town demand was exceedingly heavy this year and the city call cleaned up all the late cut stock.

Zech & Mann are more than pleased with their Thanksgiving business so far, which has been exceptionally heavy, particularly from out-of-town points. The early city demand is also good here and everything points to a grand clean-up in all lines.

J. A. Budlong had a heavy out-of-town call for stock of all kinds for Thanksgiving, as well as a brisk local trade. It was not a question of receiving orders, but filling all of them this year that counted, which practically everyone of the wholesale houses found it impossible to do this year, owing to the greatest Thanksgiving scarcity ever experienced in this market.

Paper White narcissus bulbs have been in brisk demand all week, and in some instances have advanced considerably in price. Cut stock in this line has brought as high as $6 per 100 this season, and according to one of the local wholesale houses which is handling them in good sized quantities they have averaged about five cents each so far.

John Enders, of Poehlmann Bros. Co., has just received a letter, written recently, from his son, Clarence, who is with the American troops in France. He was in several of the recent big battles and from all reports came through safely.

A. T. Pyfer, of A. T. Pyfer & Co., hit the nail on the head in sizing up the carnation market for Thanksgiving, when the best easily brought $8 per 100, which is quite a difference in price compared to some of the other turkey days.

Chas. Zapfe received a letter this week from a friend in France, who said that he had talked with Jack Byers on the day it was written, which was the first word received in regard to him for over a month.

Robert Brenton, formerly with Kennicott Bros. Co., who was among the first to volunteer when the United States declared war on Germany, is confined to an army hospital in France with rheumatism.

Erne & Co. had a splendid supply of fancy Chadwick chrysanthemums to offer for Thanksgiving, which brought high prices, although the trend of the demand was more for medium sized stock.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association has found a ready sale for all the Paper White narcissus it has had to offer so far this season. Mignonette is also among the offerings at this house.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. had their share of the Thanksgiving business, which exceeded all expectations and was doubly hard to handle owing to the great shortage of all kinds of cut flowers.

Kyle & Foerster had their share of stock to offer for Thanksgiving and took care of their customers in fine shape. Roses are a leader here and include very choice Milady.

Hoerber Bros. had a good supply of fancy chrysanthemums to offer for Thanksgiving this year, which brought very satisfactory prices. Their Chadwicks were particularly fine.

Percy Jones, Inc., is doing a big business in supplies, which are being handled on a larger scale than formerly, in addition to an ever growing cut flower trade.

The John Kruchten Co. supplied its trade with fancy Bonnaillon in quantity this Thanksgiving, which was their leader this season.

O. A. & L. A. Tonner are handling a good supply of late chrysanthemums, with Jennie Nonin now the principal offering.

I. Rosnowsky is now with the W. W. Barnard Co.

Poehlmann Bros. Co.'s supply department has been busy all month filling orders and hardly a day goes by that there are not several out-of-town buyers in selecting their goods for the holiday trade. The cut flower department experienced a brisk demand for Thanksgiving, especially from out-of-town points.

Bassett & Washburn had a good cut of roses for Thanksgiving, but, like, all the other wholesalers, found it impossible to fill any where near the heavy demand, owing to the extreme shortage.

Joe Einweck, formerly with this firm, is in Siberia with the American forces. Peter Reinberg had a good cut of stock for Thanksgiving, but not anywhere near enough to go around, although their regular customers were pretty well taken care of.

NOTES.

Gust A. Fohl is cutting the last Bonaffon, which variety is grown on a large scale annually. He grows more than one flower to the plant and figures more on quantity than quality. Stevia, too, is a long suit with him.

The next regular florists' club meeting will be held December 5 at our rooms at Kurtz Bros. As the new officers for the year 1919 will be elected, a large attendance ought to be on hand to prevent any landslides.

E. Amerpohl, of Janesville, stopped off long enough to greet old acquaintances last week. He was on his way to the northern woods on his annual hunting trip.

Jac. J. Kolb, manager of the Beaver Floral Co., Beaver Dam, Wis., was in town selecting stock for the coming holidays.

The A. F. Kellner Co. has already booked quite a few orders for Christmas decorations at this time.

November 22-23 marked the first touch of winter in this vicinity, the official report being 22 above.

Visitors: Hugo Rudolph, Manitowoc, Wis.; M. Ratchen, Jefferson, Wis. E. O.

COLUMBUS, O.—The greenhouses of the Livingston Seed Co. have been emptied of stock and will not be operated this winter.

DANVILLE, ILL.—Miss Agnes Britz, sister of Peter Britz, accompanied by Miss Violet Gibson, was in Chicago Thanksgiving week and placed a number of orders for holiday stock. Miss Britz reports business unusually good.

RICHMOND, IND.—The State Florists' Association of Indiana held its November meeting in this city. About 50 members were present and the local ranges, all in fine condition, were visited.

Sergeant Walter Sampson, formerly with A. Lange, one of the 215 American soldiers who had been held prisoners of war by the Germans, was released recently and entered the town of Revigny, November 20.

Vaughan's Seed Store reports retail mail orders for bulbs up-to-date, and but a small percentage of trade orders holding, awaiting the arrival of delayed Dutch stocks. Baby gladioli are coming in.

Visitors: F. C. W. Brown, manager of the J. M. Gasser Co., Cleveland, O.; Dave Geddes, St. Louis, Mo.; Leo Bath-er and wife, Clinton, Ia.; George Bancroft, Cedar Falls, Ia.; Ove Gnat, La Porte, Ind.; George A. LIMITED SUPPLY AT FIRM PRICES.

With cool and cloudy weather the greater part of last week and an increasing death rate due to the "Flu," stock arrived in smaller quantities and was quickly moved at good prices. With most growers, roses are off, and with the bulk of the chrysanthemums gone, conditions on November 25 are much the same as they were a short time ago. The demand, both local and for the shipping trade for the Thanksgiving business, is far ahead of expectations, and at this time all orders are being cut quite severely. The supply of carnations is far from satisfactory and will be for some time to come. There is not much in the line of variety as yet, and the question arises what are the prospects for stock for the next week or two. From present indications, better prices than quoted for the coming holiday, will be realized.

BUSINESS FAIR DESPITE HIGH PRICES.

The market the past week was in more or less of an unsettled condition. Stock was scarce and high, and the retailer more or less afraid to overbuy. Business has been fairly good considering the high prices, although there are numerous complaints about the excessive charges. Yellow Bonnafton and pink Seidewitz are the bulk of the chrysanthemums coming into the market. In pompons, Mrs. Beu is the most sought after. Violets have been very scarce. Roses are in fair supply, but not enough to go around. Carnations have improved wonderfully, but command fancy prices. Lilies are seen only spasmodically. Lily of the valley is equally scarce and the quality has been very poor the whole of this season. Greens of all kinds are equal to the demand. The smilax, however, has not yet reached the proper maturity to be of good value to the retailer.

NOTES.

The delayed florists' club meeting was held at the Missouri Botanical Garden November 21. It had been designated as a chrysanthemum show meeting, but on account of the scarcity of blooms the display was omitted. The garden, however, had a beautiful display of all kinds, shapes and colors, staged very artistically in their monster show house. This will be the last show at the garden for this season, they being unprepared to make any display of other flowers, having closed down their propagating houses. The local joint publicity committee, through Chairman Bourdet, made a lengthy and detailed report of the work of their committee and urged further and increased activity along these lines. It was also voted that the December meeting of the club be called a Victory meeting, and that it be open to all florists and allied tradesmen to create the proper spirit of co-operation and good will among all. A special programme is being arranged for the occasion.

From the looks of things, there will be just about enough chrysanthemums to fill the necessary orders for Thanksgiving with no surplus stock. The chrysanthemum season has whirled through so quickly this year, with no surplus at any time, that there is no grower who has an extra heavy cut for Thanksgiving. Chrysanthemum plants are about gone, so we will have to fall back on cyclamens, cherries and poinsettias.

Oscar May, of Sappington, expects to have Yellow Bonnaillon until Christmas. He has had a big fall season, first with his dahlias, and now with his chrysanthemums. He states his carnations will not come in right for six or eight weeks.

The ladies' florist club will hold its monthly meeting at the Y. W. C. A. December 3 at 2 P. M. All ladies are invited, whether they be members or not.

The heavy demand of the previous week has lessened considerably, but stock is scarce due to the dark, rainy weather, and the growers holding up flowers for Thanksgiving day. Advance orders indicate this will be the best ever, and we have had many wonderfully good years. Roses have not been very plentiful the past week, especially in shorter grades for funeral work. Medium and special were in fair supply in all colors, except white and red. Carnations remain short of the demand. Sweet peas also are limited. Violets are not so plentiful as last year. Present indications are a good supply of pompons and chrysanthemums will be on the market the coming week, also a fair supply of Easter lilies. Stevia is

MARKET AFFECTED BY SHORT SUPPLY.

Stocks have shortened up all along the line to such an extent that even the present light demand keeps the market on the short side. All the rose crops appear to be off, while the present cold nights retard recovery; in fact, flowers in all lines appear scarce, or are being held back for Thanksgiving. Carnations are improving, but are none too plentiful; extreme prices are predicted when chrysanthemums are cut out. The latter have sold very well, bringing at least one third more money than last season. Chadwick, Seidewitz, Eaton, and Bonaffon are now the leading sorts with Mrs. Frank Beu a prominent pompon. The prospects for a supply for Thanksgiving appear better than was thought a week ago, as quite a number of growers have reserve stocks on hand, for which good prices the assured California winter crop is the coming season, as they are being more generally grown. They are coming to the market in increasing quantities. Single and double violets are about equal to the demand. Cattleyas are scarce, nothing good for less than 75 cents. Mignonette and snapdragons are in good supply, as is stavia, a trifle green as yet, but a good seller. The first of the pussywillow is in.

THE COMING HOLIDAY BUSINESS.

The end of the war, which necessitates the closing of many munition and other government war industries, throwing out of employment tens of thousands of emergency workers, who for the past year have been making unheard of salaries, puts everybody in a quandary as to its effect on business. The great demand during October gave an impetus that has heartened and encouraged all departments of the trade. Retail stores are stocking up with Christmas goods, which the wholesale houses are finding it difficult to supply. The growers of decorative and flowering stock report very good advance business, a continuation of a splendid fall demand. It is to be hoped that this optimistic spirit will be rewarded by a business equal to the effort made to secure it. There is no doubt there will be a great impetus given to public improvements, now that all restrictions have been removed, which will absorb much of the war industry labor now available.

NOTES.

President Chas. H. Totty and Secretary John Young, of the Society of American Florists, were in town the past week in the interest of the publicity fund. They called on a number of the craft and met with a generous reception. With the exception of a few of the leaders, the general trade of this city do not seem to be awake to the possibilities of advertising, there being little or almost no effort to secure business by aid of the local newspapers.

Charles H. Totty, in speaking of pot chrysanthemums, recommends the variety Caprice du Printemps, which is grown in large quantities for the London market, and also quite extensively by plant men in New York and in some western cities. The original variety is pink, but it has sported into all the popular shades of color, light and dark

Inc., at Riverview, where the last week in October, the hundred or more acres of these tubers were all harvested and stored in quicker time than ever before, by boys, who were free to do this work owing to the closing of the schools on account of the epidemic.

A large center table in one of the W. K. Harris' greenhouses is planted out with cold storage giganteum lilies, 7 to 9 inch bulbs. These are now set with buds of varying lengths timed for the Christmas holidays, which is very good for so late in the season. Chrysanthemums are all cut out. The crop averaged 37 per cent more in money than at any time for the past 10 years.

Michaelson Brothers, who several months ago, on account of not being able to renew their lease, were obliged to vacate their store on the west side of 52nd street, below Chestnut, have the past week opened a shop almost directly across the street from their old location. They are still conducting their range at 58th and Chestnut streets.

John Andre, the rose grower of Doylestown, is to open a retail shop in that famous country town. With his range of houses and coal business, Mr. Andre has proved himself a successful business man and will, no doubt, make a go of his new venture.

Jas. G. Neidinger is getting along nicely, being able to be taken to Atlantic City, where he is in good spirits. He hopes a couple of weeks' rest will fit him to take hold of some of the work and help out at the Christmas holidays.

Wm. Koehler, who forces Dutch bulbs for Easter sales and imports direct, reports his entire order was filled, and that everything came in good condition.

Samuel Sproul has again opened his Locust Flower Shop, a few doors above his old location on 60th street, below Locust.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Earl Hager, formerly with Hitz & Son, is now in charge of the conservatory stock at the establishment of Bertermann Bros. Co.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—The W. H. Robinson range, together with 10 acres of land and the retail store at 206 North Ninth street, have been purchased by Wilbur Lahr.

TORONTO, ONT.—H. G. Dilleuth, J. J. Higgins and George Geraghty have been appointed a committee to assist in the national campaign of the Society of American Florists.

DEMAND WEAK BEFORE HOLIDAY.

The almost invariable rule of quiet business just preceding the week that includes a national holiday, is holding good. A reduced supply of stock came in during the past week, but as the demand was not heavy, there was enough. The earlier varieties of chrysanthemums are well cut out, but there are yet plenty of late ones, noteworthy being Bonnaffon, which has been arriving in quantity for at least two weeks. Considering that October weather was warm and brought in a great stock, it would seem that the greater part of the chrysanthemum crop is already cut, although in former years, straggling lots have usually kept arriving till Christmas. Sweet peas are now factors in the market, and the few long stemmed ones wholesale at $2.50 to $3 per 100, short stock at $1 to $1.50. There is a fair supply of cattleyas, wholesale prices ranging from 40 to 60 cents per flower for good stock, and a few of the very best bringing 75 cents. The best specials in American Beauty roses wholesale at the rate of $60 per 100, but most of them go cheaper. The near approach of Thanksgiving may soon stiffen these prices. Although there has been little change in prices on tea roses during the past week, a rise may now be expected, and we look for them to remain firm for the rest of the season. Both lilies and lily of the valley are plentiful and moving slowly. Carnations have been slow and hard to clean up and some of the retailers complain that their keeping qualities are below par.

November 24.—With clear and cool weather, the Thanksgiving outlook is promising. Saturday, November 23, was a good day in the wholesale market and prices stiffened. The supply of tea roses was rather light, and though it is hard to tell what may come in by the 26th, one cannot believe that there will be any surplus of roses. As to carnations, there is room for doubt. Chrysanthemums are better Thanksgiving property than carnations, and it is now nearing the "last chance" for them. The best cattleyas are likely to go to $1 per flower, wholesale, and American Beauties may also bring the same. Violets are slow in arriving, and many of them are poor, but we believe there will be enough good stock to supply the demand, providing fair weather prevails on Thanksgiving. If a bad storm should set in, not many violets will be needed. We believe that there will be a good supply of chrysanthemums and, as previously stated, Thanksgiving will about finish them.

NOTES.

The next meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held on the night of December 9. It will be "election night." It is also expected that the flower show committee will report on the feasibility of having a spring show, or to be exact, whether or not one will be held. Chairman Philip F. Kessler, of the house committee, is likely to provide a substantial lunch, as a good crowd is sure to attend. In this connection it may be repeated that Mr. Kessler is on the ticket for president of the club, and it looks like a case of the office seeking the man. He has been in the business ever since he was a boy—we believe he was born in this city. As a wholesaler, he has established a fine business and has been successful. As a member of the club, he has always been ready to do his share—and has often done more—for its advancement. It is also worth while to state that he is on the level, and if any grower says that Kessler ever cheated him, he is invited to call at our office. We do not keep a bulldog, but we know where we can borrow two for the occasion.

Now that the war is over, for we all believe that it is over, although there will doubtless be recurrences of what the lower east side of this city calls "gang fights," reconstruction will be the order of the day. We believe that the florist business of this country has suffered much less than its leading men believed it would, say a year ago. But it has suffered, just to what extent in the aggregate, it is hard to learn. Schemes—on paper—will not reconstruct it. The florists are engaged in an honorable business and do not need to resort to the schemes of clairvoyants and witch-doctors, so the best way to advance the business is for everybody to get busy, grow good stock and treat the public right.

Shortly after we entered the war, a well-known man of this vicinity had occasion to visit one of the army camps where there were a number of young men of his acquaintance. In telling of his visit, the tears came to his eyes and he said: "Many of the boys will not return." We were forcibly reminded of that remark, when recently visiting the Hession store, Madison avenue and 76th street, from which eight men entered the army. Of those, John W. Ellison, of the Rainbow Division, was killed in action September 29, and Andrew McCabe died of pneumonia on the same day. John T. Hession, a nephew of E. J. Hession, was killed in action, September 29.

"Peace hath its victories, no less than war," is a saying that has become a proverb. We will now see that it also makes great changes and brings disappointments as well. Some time ago, L. B. Nason gave up his wholesale store at 116 West 28th street and took a good position in a shipbuilding plant, he having had previous experience in that line. The slowing down of that industry threw him and many others out of employment. But he could fall back on the florist business and has again opened in the wholesale line at 106 West 28th street.

On November 11, the day of the "peace celebration," Leikens, of Madison avenue and 55th street, arranged an elaborate decoration in the residence of W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., 606 Fifth avenue. The decoration was in celebration of the signing of the armistice. He recently went to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to fill a large funeral order and says he never before in his life had seen so much coal.

Anton Bronk and wife, who conduct a retail store at 1469 First avenue, are mourning the deaths of a son and daughter who died recently, on the same day, of pneumonia following influenza. The son was 17 years old; the daughter, Mrs. Frances J. Hlavac, was 26 and is survived by her husband and a baby daughter.

Ed. Sakell, who owns the Star Florist Market, 130 First avenue, has taken the store at Columbus avenue and 86th street, formerly conducted by the late John Manolos. He is a good fellow, and we wish him success.

Cardas Brothers have a good retail store at Broadway and 181st street, and in addition to being always well stocked with cut flowers, they carry a fine line of palms, dracenas, Pandanus Veitchii and Otahete oranges.

A. Skalnik has a good retail store at 1450 First avenue, and is doing a good business. In that locality, many of the residents are Bohemian and of that descent, and they are liberal patrons of the florists.

The Colonial Florist, Broadway and 157th street, has a grand window display of yellow chrysanthemums. His large ice box is always well stocked with all the leading varieties of roses.

One of the busiest retail stores that we have recently visited, is Mrs. Snyder's, Second avenue and 59th street. She has been filling large orders for funeral work.

Goldstein & Futterman, 107 West 28th street, are receiving an exceptionally fine quality of sweet peas.

The Seed Trade

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

CHATHAM, ONT.—The Wm. Rennie Co., Ltd., of Toronto, will erect a two-story warehouse in this city.

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, ILL.—It is reported Armour & Company will build a fertilizer plant here to cost $500,000.

LAKE FOREST, ILL.—David D. P. Roy was adjudicated bankrupt November 8, liabilities $5,000, assets $2,500.

DENVER, COLO.—The Colorado Seed Co. reports brisk shipping business, many orders going to eastern points.

It is said the cargo of the S. S. Skipton Castle at New York includes a quantity of new hily of the valley.

DR. R. T. VAUGHAN, eldest son of J. C. Vaughan, has been ordered to Camp Greenleaf, Ga., preparatory to overseas service.

Two inches of frost in the middle west, November 24, sent a chill through the seedsmen and florists who are still trying to finish outdoor bulb planting.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE, Chicago and New York, have begun shipments of new crop seed beans and sweet corn from their Michigan growing station.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade November 26 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.75 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

THE yield of clover seed in the United States for 1918, is estimated at 1,248,000 bushels, a yield of 1.5 bushels per acre compared with 1.9 for a seven-year average.

BOUQUET GREEN is coming along slowly, so is the demand. Snow has fallen in the woods, the weather is colder. It will take a good price to get planting continued.

"BEAN AND PEA WEEVILS" is the title of Farmers' Bulletin No. 983, just issued by the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Twenty-four pages, profusely illustrated.

THE large number of surplus lists now in circulation show great variations in values and keep the seed jobber guessing. Are these real surpluses or is it a question of financing?

THE further harbor delay in docking the belated Dutch bulbs at New York was a great disappointment to both importers and growers who have already waited more than 10 weeks for these bulbs.

FRENCH prices are said to be considerably lower for immediate delivery. Cancellation of open orders by both American and British seed houses have discouraged the growers' former notions of prices.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover opened 10 cents higher November 25, closing at $25.90, a gain of 50 cents during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents lower, selling at $5.15; December, $5.20; January, $5.25 and May $5.35.

HOLLY.—Reports indicate a short supply, many districts giving no promise of quality, or quantity available for breaking. Several firms say they are out of it. Prices for such as is obtainable will be from $1 to $2 per case higher than last season. If freights are slow, express service will be needed and prices even higher.

NEW YORK.—Dock congestion has been of great annoyance here to bulb importers. For example, the dock where the steamer Khiva unloaded French bulbs October 8 was not cleared until November 23. Thirty cases, on which the numbers had been destroyed and identity lost, were recovered on the dock, and offered for sale to the highest bidder.

Onion Seed Crop of Canary Islands.

The second largest crop of Canary Island onion seed ever shipped to the United States has just ended its movement toward American ports, large final shipments bringing the 1918 purchases by American buyers to a final value of $98,458, according to Commerce Reports. Of this amount $2,548 worth were shipped to Porto Rico and the remaining $95,910 to the United States proper. This amount has been exceeded but once, when in 1917 $137,289 of onion seed was taken by American buyers.

That the 1918 crop would be exceptionally good was forecasted in the report made by the consul at Teneriffe, April 12, 1918, wherein it was stated that "the outlook is for a yield approximately about 15 per cent above the average and probably little, if any, below the record production of last year." As a matter of fact the yield fully realized the estimate made on April 12, while orders placed by American buyers decreased approximately 40 per cent, as compared with last year.

This has left an unusually large excess of seed on hand with the growers, and ungraded seed was being offered on the market as low as $0.20 per pound, without finding takers.

As a result, many growers are now figuring on a decidedly reduced planting for 1919. This past season showed exceptionally good results for the white or "crystal wax" variety of seed, while the yellow and red grades showed a yield which was hardly up to the average.

The threatened delays in shipments, due to the uncertain conditions governing the movements of Spanish steamers, resulted in sailings sufficient to permit of the shipment of approximately 80 per cent of the orders. The last shipment via Cuba, this being the preferred and more rapid route, was made on August 4, 1918, since which time the Canary Island shipments to the United States, via Cuba or Porto Rico, have been completely interrupted.

Many inquiries have been received at the consul's office from American onion-seed buyers as to the development in this trade during recent years. The following figures give the value of the shipments to the United States during the last five crop seasons: 1914, $43,293; 1915, $40,828; 1916, $84,337; 1917, $137,289; and 1918, $98,458.

Wisconsin Pea Packers' Association.

The convention of the Wisconsin Pea Packers' Association is in session at Milwaukee as we go to press, the meeting opening November 25 and continuing four days with about 40 delegates in attendance. The programme includes many interesting papers and discussions, among the prominent speakers being Henry Burden, president of the National Cannery Association; W. L. Leitch, of Wisconsin; W. J. Sears, of Ohio; R. F. Clark, president of the Wisconsin Pea Packers' Association; Capt. S. J. Hutchison, of England; Miss Tracy Copp, of the state industrial commission; Frank E. Gorrell, secretary of the National Cannery Association; Frank Gerber, of Michigan; James Anderson, of Utah; E. B. Cosgrove, president of the Minnesota Cannery Association; Dr. W. D. Bigelow, of the research laboratories of the National Cannery Association, and others.

Sugar-Beet Seed Production.

Preliminary returns as reported to the United States department of agriculture indicate that the area used for sugar-beet seed approximated 6,722 acres, with an estimated production of 6,385,205 pounds, an average yield of 950 pounds per acre.

Tomato Pack of 1918.

The commercial tomato pack in the United States in 1918 is about 18,762,000 cases, as compared with 14,789,000 cases in 1917, according to estimates made in the truck crop division of the bureau of crop estimates. The tonnage of tomatoes used by manufacturers for canned tomatoes in 1918 is estimated at $52,840 tons, compared with 672,207 tons in 1917; and for soup, pulp, puree, etc., 545,035 tons in 1918, compared with 224,069 tons in 1917.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

New York, November 25.—Celery (state), per bunch, 30 to 60 cents; cucumbers, $1.00 to $2.50 per dozen; mushrooms, 75 cents to $1.75 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 10 to 32 cents; lettuce, per package, 60 cents to $3.50; radishes, per 100 bunches, $1.50 to $2.50.

Potato Growers Meet.

Members of the Wisconsin Potato Growers' Association and the Potato Association of America held a meeting at Milwaukee, Wis., November 21, at which a number of men prominent in the industry were the speakers, among them being W. T. Macoun, J. W. Hicks, president of the Wisconsin Potato Growers' Association, and A. T. Van Scoy. Girls from the city high schools competed in a cooking demonstration at the potato show held in the Auditorium and there was an extensive exhibition of tubers by school gardeners.

Lou D. Sweet, Denver, Colo., member of the national food administration, was elected chairman of the executive committee of the Potato Association of America at the meeting. William Stuart, Washington, D. C., a member of the department of agriculture was elected president to succeed Mr. Sweet; W. T. Macoun, Ottawa, Ont., was re-elected vice-president; F. H. Douthitt, Clinton, Ia., secretary; A. G. Folous, St. Paul, Minn., treasurer.

Sulphate Ammonia as Fertilizer.

For many years we have adhered to the use of nitrate of soda as a chief carrier of nitrogen, either indoors or out in the fields. Experience has taught us how to use it and when, and therefore we were in no mood to change our methods. This season finding us up against a shortage of nitrate soda, we decided to experiment with ammonia sulphate. We used it first as a side dressing to an acre of Stone tomatoes, as soon as the plants had taken a hold in the field. The land was rather a poor field in fertility, but excellent in condition. We used the ammonia in addition to a standard brand of mixed fertilizer, such as is used by farmers today on corn or potatoes; that is, we mixed 25 pounds of ammonia with each 200-pound sack of material. The result was highly satisfactory. We soon had a thrifty growth of the deepest green, and the plants developed steadily into sturdy bushes which set an enormous crop of fruit in spite of a poor growing season. Potatoes and tomatoes alike require a large amount of nitrogen early in their growth to expand their foliage as soon as possible, and in either case, the ammonia filled the bill.

We further used it in the same way on lettuce, celery and spinach with excellent results. The general opinion is that nitrate of soda in its after-effect is alkaline—that is, sweetens the soil, while ammonia sulphate is acid, or sour. However, a proper course of liming must correct this evil. We have so far found no bad effects. We have always used fertilizers under glass, preferring to add some plant food that way than depending entirely upon manure. Lettuce, especially, responds to this kind of feeding, bringing the crops in strong and crisp. As a carrier of potash, we have always saved all ashes secured from the burning of all rubbish, vines and dry weeds or corn stalks.

MARKETMAN.

Boston.

SUPPLY VERY LIMITED.

Business is coming with a rush that keeps the growers hustling to supply the wants of the trade. Cloudy weather the past week caused flowers to mature slowly. The market is quite bare after the early morning rush and prices are soaring higher each day. The trade for Thanksgiving is better than expected and all indications point to brisk demand during the winter months. Due to a lack of help, growers have been caught with a short supply. Chrysanthemums are very high for this season of the year. Bonnafons selling at $3 a dozen, while the heavy call for pompons has resulted in stiffer prices.

NOTES.

At the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society William C. Endicott was elected president for the ensuing year. Other officers are as follows: Nathaniel T. Kidder, vice-president; Wm. P. Rich, secretary. The directors are Geo. E. Bernard, A. F. Estabrook, John K. M. L. Farquhar and Richard M. Saltonstall.

B. A. Snyder & Co. gave a dinner to the trade upon the occasion of the opening of their new store, November 18. John J. Cassidy acted as toastmaster and remarks were made by Frank Baker of Utica, N. Y., P. Welch, Andrew Christensen and others. A handsome clock was presented to the firm by the trade.

Chas. Evans is having a successful season with his pompons. He is having good cuts of several varieties, also swainsonas, calendulas and marguerites.

Frank Edgar will cut 3,200 Bonnafons and a large number of pompons for the Thanksgiving trade. He also has a large supply of flowering plants.

At the store of Penn. The Florist, business is unusually good. A Ford delivery car has been added to the service here.

The New England Rose Co. is in full crop with Hadley, Columbia, Ophelia, Stanley and Double White Killarney.

Welch Bros. Co. reports excellent business and anticipates a good holiday trade.

Henry R. Comley reports the demand far better than in previous years.

Sirup Production Planned in California.

Redlands, Calif., Nov. 17.—Vineyardists and winery owners of this vicinity are laying plans to convert vineyard products into grape sirup. Machinery is rapidly being installed in wineries at Guasti, Cucamonga and Rochester, near here, to manufacture this sirup, which is said to be an ideal substitute for sugar.

Damages in Misrepresentation Suit.

The Court of Appeals at Rochester, N. Y., has affirmed a judgment of $700 secured by Clarence S. Lunt against Brown Bros. Co., Ltd., nurserymen of this city, in June, 1917. The action was brought for damages arising from the sale of fruit trees by the defendant, which it is alleged did not prove as represented. The court ruled that the measure of damages is the difference in the value of the land as it is and the value as it would have been if the trees had been as represented. The case has been followed closely by nurserymen in the state.

Illinois First Great Apple Show.

The Illinois First Great Apple Show held at the Morrison hotel, Chicago, November 19-22, mention of the opening of which was made in last week's issue, page 868, proved a complete success, especially in the numerous displays of fine stock and the representative attendance and interest manifested in the event by orchardists throughout the state. As far as the general public was concerned, and taking into consideration the fact that no admission was charged, the number of visitors was not up to what the fine exhibition deserved, but enthusiasm on the part of those who attended was not lacking, and in the general show and the interesting special features they found much of interest. At a meeting of the growers in attendance, it was the consensus of opinion that the show should become an annual event, but discussion showed a division as to whether it should be restricted to a state proposition or be broadened in scope to embrace the industry throughout the middle west. This point will be decided at a later date.

The arrangement of the displays was excellent, each showing to splendid advantage. The plan of Professor B. S. Pickett, of the University of Illinois, in charge of installation and exhibits, of having glass heads for the barrel displays, tried for the first time in the United States, was highly commended, while the fine appearance made by the entries shown in baskets left no doubt that this form of container was the coming package, other advantages being enhanced by the point of economy.

Included in the varieties staged in the numerous entries were fine plates, trays, boxes, baskets and barrels of Jonathan, Grimes, Rome Beauty, N. W. Greening, Delicious, Winesap, Banana, Ben Davis, Black Ben Davis, Gano, Black Twig, Arkansas Black, Akin, King David, Salome, Willow, Huntsman, Minkler, York Imperial, Wealthy, Maiden Blush, Fameuse, and Stark.

Prominent in the list of principal prize winners were the following: A. W. Brayton, Mount Morris; Moon Orchard Co., Barry; Lilly Orchard Co., Lilly; F. H. Simpson, Flora; C. G. Winn, Griggsville; W. R. Severhill, Tiskilwa; H. M. Simpson, Parkersburg; T. S. Smith, Chicago; Commercial Orchard Co., Olney; L. R. Bryant, Princeton; J. R. Lambert, Coatsburg; E. L. There were numerous exhibits of insecticides, pumps and hand and power sprayers, among the firms represented being the Deming Co., Salem, Ohio; Friend Manufacturing Co., Gasport, N. Y.; Niagara Sprayer Co., Middleport, N. Y.; Martin-Senour Co., Chicago; Sherwin-Williams Co., Cleveland; Bean Sprayer Co., Chicago; Inter-State Chemical Co., Newark, N. BUSINESS RETURNS TO NORMAL.

With the lifting of the influenza ban, and the decreasing of the epidemic, business resumed more of a normal aspect during the week just passed, than it has since the middle of October. Funeral work has continued good, but the abnormal demand of the past few weeks has subsided. A large number of pre-nuptial parties called for flowers, especially for corsages for the honor guest, and attractive table decorations, and counter trade has been much more brisk than recently, due to the increased number of shoppers since the removal of the ban. The supply of roses and carnations has been greatly curtailed by the dark weather, and many of the retailers are finding considerable difficulty in filling orders. Carnations are especially scarce, and prices quoted for them are very high. Roses are of very fine quality with some splendid blooms of Ophelia. Violets are coming into this market very slowly, and only a limited supply is expected for Thanksgiving. Sweet peas are also scarce, and miniature roses, snapdragons and orchids are only in fair supply.

NOTES.

Handsome specimens of Turner chrysanthemums and Ophelia roses were staged in a very effective way in the window of the Flick Floral Co. This firm's line of blooming plants is very complete, and their obconics are especially worthy of mention.

A fine display of cyclamen, the first of the season, is being shown in the attractive window of Ed Wenninghoff, who reports business in blooming plants very active, especially since the curtailment in the supply of cut flowers.

The Doswell Floral Co. is cutting a large variety of the late chrysanthemums and report that they will have a good crop for their Thanksgiving trade.

Nassau County Horticultural Society.

The monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held in Pembroke hall, Glen Cove, N. Y., on November 13, with a large attendance of members. President Robert Jones occupied the chair.

G. W. Wyatt, of Glen Cove, was elected an active member and Arthur Gibb of Glen Cove an honorary member of the society. For the monthly exhibits the following were appointed as judges: Benjamin Sutherland, John W. Everitt, and Joseph Adler, who made the following awards: Best three chrysanthemums, white, three pink and three yellow, all won by James McCarty. Exhibition, three heads of celery, cultural certificate, Frank Petroccia; honorable mention, John Dombrowski. For a vase of seedling chrysanthemums, Jas. Holloway. Mr. Holloway also exhibited 43 potatoes from one tuber planted on August 24. He also made a few interesting remarks on the subject.

A letter of condolence was ordered sent to the family of the late Mrs. C. F. Cartledge, and to Herman Boucher, a member of the society who has recently lost his wife.

President Robert Jones generously offered a prize of $10 for the best table decoration, for gardeners' assistants only. The first prize will be $5, the second $3 and the third $2, to be competed for at the next meeting. Competition for the society prizes will be 25 Brussels sprouts; six leeks and 50 single violets. It was decided to hold a smoker with the next meeting, December 11.

PROFITABLE PRODUCTION.

Paper by Otto H. Amling, Read at a Meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club, November 7, 1918.

Present Conditions Hit Grower Hardest.

As a member of a committee appointed by the worthy president of our club "to make recommendations for bettering conditions in the trade," I wish to say that I have made a careful study of this subject, and my observations and experience lead me to submit for your kind consideration, first, an analysis of the situation and then, recommendations for improvements. At the present time, under existing conditions, all branches of the trade are suffering and not getting the returns they should from their business. The hardest hit of all is the grower, the backbone of the business, who has by far the greatest investment of any, the biggest fixed expense in depreciation and otherwise, and an extremely hazardous business. He is at present facing a serious situation and wondering whether it will be possible for him to survive. However, upon his welfare depends the further existence of the wholesaler and retailer.

Reports show that many greenhouse establishments are now operating at a loss, and of these quite a number, finding it impossible to produce at a loss indefinitely, will close down all or part of their houses, to keep from losing more. This reduction in the supply, added to the former output of the glass already abandoned, may cut quite a figure in the future of our business, and directly affects the wholesaler and retailer. To prevent further curtailment of production, it is necessary to get better average prices for the grower than those prevailing in past seasons. To this end, the co-operation and assistance of all branches of the trade are needed. Better average prices will keep the growers above water, increase the commission and lessen the handling expenses of the wholesaler, and insure the retailer a steady flow of stock.

It has been suggested that the only solution of the grower's problem is the establishment of a powerful growers' organization to handle the selling and establish a chain of stores for the direct disposal of flowers to the public at profitable prices. This, however, may be unnecessary, as there is no reason why the established wholesale houses should not handle the stock at prices that will enable the grower to make ends meet. To accomplish this it is necessary in the first place for the wholesaler to know what profitable prices for flowers are, and secondly, to get them. Many wholesalers have no producing experience, and that of others is antiquated. Therefore, it is necessary for the grower to supply him with an accurate record of the present day cost of production per flower, from which he can determine the price he should get for the different varieties and grades from time to time to bring the season's average up to where it should be. I am convinced that a thorough knowledge of what it costs to produce each flower today will open the eyes of many men in the flower business, and lead them to realize more fully that each flower has a value, and spur them on to get better average prices and not sell as cheaply as has been common practice most of the time in the past.

Good Prices for the Asking.

Profitable prices can be secured by the wholesaler, if asked. Many times, it requires nothing more. It should be borne in mind that nature brings on by far the largest quantity of stock during the spring and summer months, and that the prevailing price in these months, in a great measure, decides the season's average price. Even the prices may seem high during some months, when production is low, to make up for the low averages prevailing at other times, requires selling at these good figures. Uniform prices by all houses on equal stock, and the establishment and maintenance of a minimum price on flowers, such as $1 per 100 on roses, the benefit of their large purchases, 50 cents per 100 on carnations, and similar figures on other staple articles, would also result in materially improving weekly returns to the grower, as frequently just as much stock can be sold at these figures as could be moved if allowed to drop still further, thereby demoralizing the market.

It would be better, in times of abundance, to donate to the hospitals of the country the unsold surplus, if any, after prices have reached these extremely low levels, than follow the practices of many wholesalers to offer stock for sale at 50 cents per 100 when his competitors are asking an established minimum of $1 per 100. No greater quantity of stock is sold at the lower figures and the loss to the grower and wholesaler is tremendous. It matters little whether John Doe's stock is sold, or that of Jim Smith, not whether one wholesaler makes the sale, or another. The main thing is that some one makes a profitable sale and not below the established minimum. If this is kept in the minds of all wholesalers, the wonderful mutual results will be reflected in the grower's statement.

Reconsignment and Regrading.

Another practice of the wholesaler which has frequently come within my own personal observation, which does not work out to the grower's best interests, is the reconsignment of stock, and the neglect at times of one wholesaler to charge another market price for goods bought although the stock so purchased is oftentimes again billed out at top market prices. In fact, some wholesalers have few or no consigners, and openly boast of being able to buy stock from others at prices enabling them to resell at wholesale at figures yielding them as high as 100 per cent profit. Growers can curb this practice and get the full price at which the stock is billed to the retailer, less the usual 15 per cent commission, by so distributing their stock that no one house will be overloaded on certain stock, and placing it as nearly direct to the buyer as possible.

A uniform system of grading such as roses by all growers, to a certain length of stem, say 12 inches and under, 15 inches, 18 inches, 24 inches, 30 inches, 36 inches and 48 inches, is to tie them in bundles of 50 each, allowing one extra for breakage, which would materially lessen the expense of handling the stock by the wholesaler, as frequently stock can be sold in these original bundles, and thereby eliminate some of the breakage and bruises incidental to re-grading. Open flowers, ready for immediate sale, should be kept separate. Bundles of a given length of stem would reduce the practice of some of the wholesaler's employees in cutting stems short unnecessarily, just because they think they ought to be so. Often have I witnessed this, much to my disgust. It costs money to grow every inch of stem on a rose, and the full length of stem should be utilized whenever possible, and stems reduced in length no more than necessary.

Advisory Board Suggested.

A plan that has struck me as practical is the establishment of an advisory board, consisting of three representative men from each branch of the trade, wholesalers, retailers and "growers," meeting twice a week to discuss prevailing conditions. Such meetings would help in a great measure towards bringing closer co-operation. Such board, for instance, could issue bulletins after each meeting, a separate one to the retailers featuring the items that represent the best value at the time, owing to the quantity on hand. The prospects of the cut for the next few days as gauged by the weather conditions, and by information furnished by the growers, would also help him with his plans. Retailers would be thus enabled during times of over-abundance to get bargains, if quantity purchases are made, and should go out and make a splurge, giving the public part of thereby moving a large quantity of stock (much the same as the dry goods man in his line), resulting in new customers, and a handsome profit, besides eliminating the competition of the department stores. The growers' bulletin would contain timely advice such as: "Cut stock tighter, due to the prevailing heat wave; market overfilled on roses; pinch that stock you can to have it come later; quite a lot of stock arriving infected with mildew; get after thrips, etc." The recipient of this bulletin would stop to think whether any of his stock had been neglected in any way, and much could be accomplished in this way toward raising the quality of flowers received on the market. Under prevailing conditions, the individual wholesaler often hesitates to call a grower's attention to his neglect, fearing he may lose a consignor even though such advice would mean many dollars in his pocket, still more to the grower, and more general satisfaction to the retailer.

Wholesaler's Position Important.

In conclusion, I wish to say that after all, the wholesaler, as the grower's selling agent, and the source of supply of the retailer, controls the situation, and it is my honest belief that he can do more than any other at this time to furnish immediate relief to the grower, enabling him to continue his difficult task in these times of stress, and by so doing improve his own welfare, as well as that of the retailer.

My general idea of improvements in the present system and affording immediate relief for the grower, can be termed as "Cutting off the rough edges of present practices of the wholesaler," and closer co-operation with him by his retailer and the grower. Permit me to summarize the foregoing in the following brief recommendations:

1. Growers, study the costs of production and bring them to the knowledge of the wholesalers.

2. Wholesalers, do not be bashful about asking a price, and remember that your season's returns per flower must average above the costs to enable the grower to live, and that the price received during the months of heaviest production decide the average more than the seemingly high prices usually prevalent when cuts are low.

3. Wholesalers, establish a minimum price of $1 per 100 on roses, 50 cents per 100 on carnations and similarly on other staple articles.

4. Wholesalers, always bear in mind that even though you may lose a sale by asking a price from a customer who wants to buy for a song, that by maintaining uniform prices, some other man will make a profitable sale, resulting in mutual benefits.

5. Growers, consign your stock to the house through which it reaches the retailer most direct.

6. Wholesalers, charge one another full market price. You owe it to the growers.

7. Growers, co-operate with, and assist your wholesalers by a uniform system of grading and bunching, adopting such standard sizes as 12, 15, 18, 24, 30, 36 and 48 inches for roses.

8. Wholesalers, remember that each inch of stem costs money to produce, and utilize full length whenever possible.

9. The election of a representative advisory board of nine members, three to be chosen from each branch of the trade, meeting twice weekly in the trade's interest.

10. The issuance of two semi-weekly bulletins, one for the retailer and one for the grower.

11. Retailers to purchase as much as possible the items on the long side of the market in sufficient quantity to prevent stock from reaching the department stores, thereby reaping the benefit for themselves.

It has been my aim to depict conditions as they exist, not solely to criticize, but with a view to effect improvements which will insure the future prosperity of our business, and result in mutual benefits. I would urge a discussion of these recommendations and the adoption of those that meet your approval.

The Figures.

Cost of production has been arrived at by taking the total operating expenses for the year, including proper depreciation charges and six per cent interest on the total investment and dividing this into the total number of square feet of bench space. Thereafter, the cost per square foot is used as a basis for all other determinations.

The cost of operation per square foot of bench space of an exclusive rose growing establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, was 67.6

The present-day cost of operating each square foot is, and the total for the current year will be, much higher than the average prevailing during the past year. For instance, quite a lot of coal was bought the fore part of the year at lower figures and with lower freight rates attached than obtainable now. Labor also is considerably higher. The latter you will note comes first in order of importance, with coal ranking next. These two represent a grower's heaviest expense items, and any increases are reflected immediately on his balance sheet. Of course, the advances of other items since last year, also add to a grower's difficulties.

Considering all advances, and the extremely hazardous nature of the business, with little or no insurance, due to the almost prohibitive rates, I feel the gross returns per square foot per season to meet present conditions, and provide a profit commensurate with the chances taken, should be no less than 96.2 cents per square foot on roses and similar crops requiring the same high temperature, fertilizer and amount of time to handle. These figures would be somewhat lower in the case of carnations and other cool growing crops.

The cost of operating per square foot is the basic figure for all other deter-

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

inations. Some varieties of roses, such as Russell and others, are sometimes set closer, but the average planting distance of most growers is 12x15 inches. Each plant thus occupies 14 square feet of bench space. The gross returns per plant on roses should be not less than $1.20 on varieties occupying 14 square feet, and proportionately, according to distance set.

The average wholesale price for the year that must be obtained to reach this figure depends on the quantity of flowers a plant will produce on an average per season. Compilation of the average production, good average flowers per plant from records of the past three years, together with the average length of stem on Russell (later we expect also to have an accurate record of the average length of stem of other varieties), shows as follows:

Russell	17.3 flowers
Brilliant	32.4 flowers
White Killarney	35.1 flowers
Mildred	25.4 flowers
Opheelia	26.5 flowers
Sunburst	28.4 flowers

Taking $1.20, the lowest amount a plant should return in a season, and dividing it into the average yield of each variety for a number of years, gives us the average price that should prevail on each variety, namely:

Russell	6.26c each
Brilliant	3.69c each
White Killarney	3.29c each
Mildred	4.67c each
Opheelia	4.38c each
Sunburst	4.52c each

The selling price should necessarily be considerably higher for select stock and correspondingly lower for stock grading lower. Also, the prices during the cold season, when the yield is limited and operating costs heaviest, should go above the year's average because of the exceeding low prices during the season of heaviest production.

Although I have no late records on carnations, from past experience and from the best information obtainable, I would venture to say that the gross returns per square foot on carnations should be no less than 81 cents per square foot. Figuring a carnation plant as occupying 7.9 square feet of bench space, and taking a general average yield on all varieties of 18 flowers per plant, would bring the season's price to 2½ cents per. Selling prices of all other flowers and plants can be determined from the foregoing basis.

Lilium Candidum.

Long before the longiflorum lilies of Japan became prominent or were forced for market, Lilium candidum, called the Annunciation lily, was the recognized Easter flower. Their beautiful spikes containing from 10 to 12, and sometimes more flowers and buds, with their bright yellow stamens, combined with a delightful fragrance, made them especially valuable for church and altar decorations.

They are easily grown, but do not like too much heat, doing best in a carnation temperature. They should be potted immediately on arrival and placed in cold frames, when they commence to grow at once, soon having their leaves above the soil. Freezing does not seem to hurt them. They can be flowered in from six weeks to two months after being brought inside, depending on weather conditions.

All the bulbs are imported, the best stock being grown in the north of France. Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, Pa., said, in referring to this variety, that at one time, before the introduction of the longiflorums, he grew them in quantity, they being in good demand as cut flowers in late winter, and at Easter were the recognized flower for altar and church decoration. He thought that today, a number of plants together in a tub or pan, done the same as the gigantesms, would make very acceptable plants for the Easter market.

Unfortunately, this year they are practically unobtainable, as owing to war conditions, not ten per cent of the orders for candidums that were given the French growers have been filled.

They are valuable in the rock garden or herbaceous border, their beautiful white spikes standing well above the other flowers. Their blooming season is in the middle of June. As a cut flower, they are in demand at this season for weddings and design work.

Munro Buys Reuter Range.

Charles Munro, prominent grower of New Haven, Conn., with a large range in that city, has purchased the establishment at Westerly, R. I., formerly conducted by S. J. Reuter & Son before that firm went into bankruptcy and will conduct it on a larger scale than ever. The property, which was bought by the Washington Trust Co., to cover a mortgage, is being made ready for resumption of business as rapidly as possible, the sale including greenhouses, extensive land holdings and a residence.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—H. J. Ryan, of Alhambra, has been appointed county horticultural commissioner.

CANTON, O.—Wm. F. Raebel, who suspended business last year to enter government service, has reopened in the Auditorium market.

CENTRAL CITY, NEB.—Joseph W. Lawson, formerly of Fulton, Ill., has completed a new range here with 12,000 square feet of floor space and reports very satisfactory business.

Sibley's Attractive Establishment.

The accompanying illustration shows the entrance to the attractive establishment of Charles W. Sibley, Athol, Mass., as it appeared in September of the present year. The plantings were all made last year, with the exception of the Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora, which were set out in tubs this spring. The doorway is covered with ampelopsis. The common woodbine is native to that section and nothing is more beautiful in summer than to see the walls of houses and the fences in the field covered with this vine. The tub in the center of the picture is filled with pink and white coleus, while the shrub at the left is a retinospora. The geraniums, variety Jean Viaud, have attracted much attention, nothing finer having been seen in the vicinity.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

There is often a dull spell in the early days of December, and particularly now when there are no debutante teas. If this is to be our lot this year, the most should be made of the opportunity it presents in preparing for the coming busy holiday period, which is now but two weeks away. If any of the various lines of stock for the Christmas trade have not been ordered, they should be shaped trees, not over 24 inches in height, can be decorated with small wired bunches of red immortelles at the ends of the branches. A generous bow around the tub finishes an ornament suitable for the Christmas dinner or gift table. We have seen trees that ordinarily sold for $2 and $2.50, with the addition of half a bunch of red immortelles and ribbon bow, sell for $5 to $6.

Every spare moment should be utilized in making boxwood and evergreen wreaths. With a good stock of these on hand, much of the slavish night work of the last week is avoided. There should be a good stock of spruce or pine cones in assorted sizes, as they add an effect to the wreaths that help their sale materially. Magnolia wreaths, decorated with cones, red ruscus, statice and fresh evergreen sprays, should be ready in quantity for the cemetery demand, which, no doubt, will be an important factor in this year's holiday trade.

Single wire-frame crescent wreaths, wrapped with newspaper, make a good foundation on which to wind the Japanese red chenille. These tied with fresh holly or boxwood, red and white ruscus, a few cones, and finished with a red bow, make a showy wreath for the windows that can be sold for a good profit.

Calendulas are coming to the front as a stock flower, and are seen in all markets. The Orange King and Queen, secured at once. Many who know they need this or that important item, put off the ordering from day to day, until finally it becomes a rush matter that puts everybody to inconvenience, entails unnecessary expense, and oftentimes disappointment and loss.

A good Christmas stock that should be secured now is small Norway or Colorado green spruce. These should be potted or tubbed and placed in shelter, as severe frost will give them a brownish tint that detracts. It is a job that can be finished much better now than 10 days later. A few well-a light and dark shade of yellow, are alike in form and size, but very distinct in color. Selected flowers are good enough for any assorted box and very effective in table decoration. The stems foul the vase rather quickly, but this can be corrected with a couple of drops of formaldehyde in the water, which prevents fermentation.

Yellow daisies and pansies are a pretty combination for the small tumbler or vase baskets. Small hampers, similarly arranged, will attract attention and induce sales that would not be made without their display.

Do not forget the Paper White narcissus. A showing of planted dishes, with bulbs on pebbles, is sure to interest customers and effect sales. Paper Whites are almost certain to flower, being much more satisfactory than Chinese lilies.

Is the F. T. D. work being featured? Keep the emblem always to the front, in the store or window. The local business that is worked up is entirely new trade that comes because of the ble for a small attendance, the matter was deferred until the December meeting.

Mr. Craig attributes the cause of present unsatisfactory business conditions principally to lack of cooperation, the three distinct branches of the trade acting separately when they should work in unity, with the result that the trade in general is giving to the public profits that it should retain, and he

the right to fix penalties, fines, etc., when it is deemed necessary, and the ruling referred to the members of the Chicago Florists' Club for final action but all decisions rendered by the committee must be affirmed by at least two growers, two wholesalers and two retailers of such committee before being submitted to the club for final disposition.

As an index to the various branches of the industry and proper classification of firms and individuals, it is suggested that registration cards be sent out to members in the different branches, these to be filled out, and which will aid in placing the member in the class in which he properly belongs, grower, wholesaler or retailer, thus aiding in adjustments.

The object of the committee, as outlined by Mr. Craig, is to give each and every florist, trade justice; a committee that will work hand in hand with all branches of the trade and for the benefit of the business in general, to whom every man in the trade can refer difficulties and business grievances, knowing that the committee was formed to draw all branches closer together in commercial life, and for the benefit of all.

National Publicity for Flowers.

Nearly every mail now brings to the secretary's office, requests, accompanied by cash in various forms, for deliveries of flowers at Christmas in different parts of the country. Many, of course, are from soldiers in France. If our publicity is working to this extent abroad, what may we expect it is doing here at home? Our slogan "Say it with Flowers" is taking hold better even than we expected. And our Christmas advertisements in the magazines are doing just what we intended they should do—they are influencing the public to consider floral offerings as most acceptable and desirable Christmas gifts.

It may be stated once more, that eight magazines of national circulation are carrying our Christmas message. If we can judge by indications, this advertising will result in an enormous amount of business for florists which without it would not be produced. And yet hundreds of florists who will share in this increased business, seem to be unable to make up increased and country wide delivery facilities offered through the membership of the organization. Overtime work on this idea will bring big returns.

Get the Christmas circular out in good time. It should be in the mail not later than December 15. A list of the novelties in the various lines, nicely worded, and a cordial invitation to see the store in its holiday attire, is sure to bring good results.

Fill a plant basket with plants of Glory fern. In vases among the ferns, place mignonette and cypripediums, and tie the handle with a bow of two-toned green ribbon. Small glass tubes on the handle hidden by the ferns and ribbon, filled with cypripediums will add a finishing touch. Cattleyas are also shown to good advantage in such a basket. Separate flowers can be as readily sold from the arrangement as from vases in the flower case. Cattleya ribbon should be used instead of the green with the latter orchids.

Let one of your Christmas gifts be a subscription to the publicity fund, which is doing so much to boost your business. You are purchasing prosperity when you invest your money along these lines. Send a "ten spot" to John Young, 1170 Broadway, New York. He will send you all their advertising literature. Display it in the store. You will feel the effect of it at once.

Adjusting Trade Difficulties.

At a meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club, September 5, 1918, Arthur A. Craig, after suggesting a method to overcome trade difficulties by cooperation through a joint body composed of five growers, five wholesalers and a like number of retailers, was appointed a committee of one to prepare a working plan in detail to be presented at the November meeting of the club. Due to the peace celebration on that date, and inclement weather which was responsible suggests the formation of a committee as above mentioned to secure cooperation from all branches as a protection to the industry as a whole, and acting further as a body to whom trade difficulties and grievances could be referred for honest adjustment.

In outlining the rules and by-laws governing such committee, it is suggested that each member must be a grower, wholesaler or retailer or in the florists' supply business, also a member of the Chicago Florists' Club in good standing, each member to hold office for one year, with the exception of the chairman, whose term will be two years.

The committee will judge and debate on all subjects that are referred to it, and then vote what action the grower, wholesaler or retailer should take on the subject in question, having their minds that it is to their own interests to subscribe to our publicity campaign fund, so that we can complete our plans for the present year. Most subscribers of amounts of $100 or more are amazed to think that in spite of an improved demand for flowers resulting from our efforts so far, there is an apparent unwillingness on the part of many florists to shoulder even a very small ratio of the expense. A quarter dollar a week seems an insignificant sum, but we should be glad to enter up subscriptions for it just the same—less if anybody thinks they cannot afford that much.

These among our subscribers who have watched closely the progress of our campaign declare that there can be no doubt about the fact that business has been increased from 15 to 35 per cent over what would have been the aggregate this particularly lean year.

The best way to get direct benefit from our magazine advertising is to connect with it locally by running in local newspapers, under a florist's own name, an electrotpe which is, as nearly as possible, a counterpart of the magazine advertisement. Our promotion bureau, 1170 Broadway, New York, supplies these electrotypes at cost. The Christmas electrotpe is now ready. Send us a dollar and it will be promptly mailed. With proper use it will demonstrate to you better than anything else the value of our campaign. It is a sure winner. The hundreds of florists who have used the electrotypes previously sent out, are all back again for the Christmas production. They know its value, for they have determined it by experience.

We have a little pamphlet describing all our aids for direct advertising. Anyone who has not received a copy should drop us a request for one. These aids are designed especially to assist the trade to get the full benefit from our advertising.

German Finances.

With the defeat of the central powers, there is brought to ruin a country that occupied the third place in the world, in national wealth and resources. What the state of Germany's finances is at present is uncertain. What they will do in the future is mere guess work. With her foreign trade gone, her people loaded with the obligations of a discredited government, and with the prospects of an enormous indemnity, Germany's financial greatness can be nothing but a byword for generations to come. The same may be said of Austria.

Our Business.

Synopsis of an address by Robert Craig, delivered at the meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, November 5.

In opening his address, Mr. Craig stated that owing to the short notice he had not had time to prepare a paper, but would relate his experiences during an active life of over 60 years in the business, as he had started helping his father when about 10 years of age, and with the exception of the time spent in school, had been continuously at it ever since. He said:

"As we learn more from our mistakes than our successes, I think I have made enough of the former to have given me a liberal education, and I think their recital may interest you. In May, 1861, I was standing in the curb market helping my father sell plants at Sixth and Walnut streets. It was the day Fort Sumter was fired upon, and I can recall a mob of men storming the office of a newspaper called the Age, which paper sympathized with the south, and then rushing off to spend their wrath on others of like tendencies. At that time one could count on the fingers of their two hands all the florists in Philadelphia that were of any note—Robert Buist, John Dick, David Ferguson, Robert Scott, Peter Mackenzie, Andrew Dryburg, Fred. Algier and John Sherwood. There were but two stores, and they were in basements, conducted by Hanft Bros., who later moved to New York, and John Ritchie. There were pessimists in those days the same as now. John Dick, who was a private gardener, and desired to start in business, was obliged to do so over the protests of his friends who tried to dissuade him on the ground that there were already too many, and he would have no chance of success. I remember as a boy, pulling celery plants on a rainy morning, hearing one of the men who were waiting for them say: 'There's lots of money in hothouses,' and the other say, 'No, not now; there are too many of them.' Andrew Dryburg was the fashionable florist of those days. He had a large stock of camellias, which were then the popular flower, there being scarcely any roses. He made up all the bouquets for the assembly balls. They ranged in price from $7.50 to $20, and were almost all exactly alike except in size. The flowers, besides the camellias used, were stemmed portions of the bracts of the poinsettia, broken heads of bouvardia, stevia, sweet alyssum, etc. His help consisted of but one man, whose salary was $10 a week. All his business was done at the greenhouses, quite a distance from the retail section of the city.

"The trials of carrying on business for the past two years have been very severe, particularly for those who have had a number of employees, large ranges of glass to keep up and have had to depend on the greatly curtailed transportation facilities of the express companies for the delivery of their stock.

"There has been a cessation of business in every line of the craft, as many wealthy people thought it was unpatriotic to buy flowers in wartimes and, even closed their conservatories, sold their plants and encouraged their help to go into government industries for the period of the war. All this will soon be changed as, with the successful closing of the war in sight, these empty houses will be filled with plants, the gardeners will regain their places, and society resume its activities on an even larger scale than before the war."

While many, particularly those in the trade, complain of the remuneration of the business, the speaker said he thought a comparison with other lines would open their eyes. Commercial agency reports, show that not more than four per cent of men who start in all lines of business succeed, and that the florists could make a better showing than this. Men to be successful should take up or confine themselves to specialties. He cited the cases of several large growers, some with considerable capital, Robert Eust, George Such of South Amboy, Pitcher & Manda, and others, who had each endeavored to keep a stock of the entire list of plants in cultivation, but on account of the great expense involved had failed to succeed. William K. Harris, who had made a great success in his business, confined himself to specialties, growing what he could do well in quantities as the demand developed in the market.

Mr. Craig said he would advise young men engaging in the business to become specialists, as in confining themselves to one line, they would bring a perfection and finish to their stock that would insure for it a ready market at the highest prices. He also advised every florist about to start in business to carefully select his location, in a portion of the city that the ground was likely to enhance in value, and then purchase the property. There were numbers of instances in the large cities and communities all over the country where florists, who, although diligent all their lives, had had but a fair measure of success, but were able finally, on account of the great increase in the value of their real estate, to retire with a competency. There would be great rejoicing and impetus to business, both in this country and abroad at the close of the war. He predicted that even in Germany, when our victorious soldiers marched through the streets of Berlin, that the people would regard them as their deliverers, and strew their paths with flowers.

He predicted a great future for the business in this country; the love of flowers would never pass out, but would be always increasing. Florists should not become discouraged at the present trials, but work earnestly for the good times that were surely coming when all would join in the general prosperity.

National Business Headquarters Urged.

At a meeting of the Manufacturers' Export Association in New York recently, B. S. Cutler, one of the speakers, made the plea that the business interests of the United States deserve a national headquarters where a policy of affirmative constructiveness will rule the day or at least there should be sufficient counterbalance to the numerous agencies in restraint of trade that political expediency has brought into being during the last 20 years. He outlined his conception of the economic structure of the country as a "great workshop common to all." With every livelihood an "effort in association," neglect to any was declared to react eventually on all the others. This view was placed in contradistinction to the doctrine preached by cynical journalism, seeking to pile up circulation, and by irresponsible agitators, to the effect that business is intrinsically immoral and subversive of the public good.

DRACÆNA MANDAÏNA

Dracaenas.

One of the most useful of the ornamental greenhouse plant section is the dracaena. There is scarcely a collection, no matter how small, but boasts of a D. terminalis, fragrans of Massangeana. These three varieties are grown universally. Very few, however, grow their own stock, depending on imports or the products of less than a dozen growers, who specialize on dracaenas and other foliage stock. Dracaenas are for the most part grown from canes or stalks of the plant, which are obtained in Cuba, Porto Rica, Isle of Pines, Trinidad and other tropical climes. The canes are from one-half to one inch in diameter. They are cut into 12-inch lengths and laid in a bed of sand and peat covered about half an inch. Breaks are soon seen above the surface and in eight weeks the strongest of these are ready for cutting. A 12-inch length will develop from two to four shoots. The cutting is taken an inch from the cane, leaving a stump which will make two breaks, each of which often send up two shoots after they have been cut back. The cuttings are rooted in the regular sand propagating bed, being ready for pots in three weeks.

Plants can be secured in larger quantities at first if the canes are cut into six-inch lengths, but the cuttings are not as strong, nor does the bed produce as long. Some varieties last longer than others—terminalis is done in two years; Lord Wolseley lasts three to four. The heavy leaved types, such as Massangeana, fragrans, etc., are propagated from stock planted out on tables, from which cuttings are taken all the season round whenever ready. They never have any surplus of Massangeana, although the propagating bed is 300 feet long by five in width, probably the largest in the country. The miniature D. Sanderiana stock for propagating, is kept in three-inch pots. They come quickest when kept pot bound; this is another quick seller.

D. Kelleriana, of which they have now the largest stock in the country, is also grown from cuttings. It is in great demand for holidays as a basket plant.

To get color in dracaenas they must be kept in a growing, healthy condition; the proper watering and syringing is very important, an excess either way being very injurious.

The most popular varieties in the order of merit are D. Massangeana, terminalis, Lord Wolseley, De Smettiana, Paul Cheron and Mandaïna. It takes one year to perfect a dracaena in a six or seven inch pot from the time the cutting is taken.

BUSINESS UNUSUALLY GOOD.

Business is keeping up steadily. All the stores report extra good demand for this time of the year. The recent heavy rains have curtailed the chrysanthemum supply, and it is not expected that any extra good stock will be offered from now on. Appleton and Bonaffon are the leaders in yellow, but we are short of a good white. Pink is plentiful and sells well. Pompons are very abundant, and owing to the shortage in other types, prices are picking up for this class of stock. Elaine, one of the oldest and best of florist whites, and largely used and shipped on this coast, is beginning to put in an appearance. This popular old white is a great lily of the valley, sweet peas, wallflowers, forget-me-nots and baby primroses.

ALL PRICES TREND UPWARD.

The flower market the past week went soaring. The price of stock from day to day changed, mostly upward. Carnations have reached $12.50 per hundred, if you are lucky enough to get them. Roses of all kinds are in demand, no prices asked. The same thing holds good for chrysanthemums. Violets are very scarce. The facts are that the supply is entirely inadequate, and it has created a condition we have not faced before. The retailers are swamped with orders and fill them to the best of their ability. For Thanksgiving, fortunately there was a big supply of chrysanthemums and pompons. This was lucky, as this city had the biggest trade in its history. Advance orders placed by the retailers for their stock, insured the necessary supply. Even at that, most of the retailers were sold out by noon and closed up. The writer estimates that the volume of business done exceeded last year's about 25 per cent. Some of this increase no doubt is due to publicity. Plants of all kinds sold well, the large chrysanthemums and pompons of course being the big sellers. With chrysanthemums pretty well cut out, the conditions in regard to supply of stock will not better themselves very much until after the first of the year when carnations, sweet peas and bulbous stock comes in stronger. Green also has big demand, smilax being rather scarce.

NOTES.

It is rumored that Al Gumz, of the Windler Wholesale Floral Co., and W. A. Rowe of Kirkwood, found the skids well greased and the sands rather hot on a certain journey they undertook within the last few days.

The banquet which the publicity committee had scheduled for the early part of December, has been postponed indefinitely on account of the ban on such meetings until the influenza epidemic has subsided.

Among the florists recorded as sick are Oscar Ruf, Chas. Young and Oscar May. They are all doing nicely, and expect to be at business shortly.

From the present outlook, Christmas this year will have to be a plant Christmas, as the supply of cut flowers certainly will not be adequate.

OBITUARY.

John Henry Small.

John Henry Small, of the firm of J. H. Small & Sons, a lifetime resident of Washington, D. C., and since boyhood identified with the florist trade of that city, passed away on the morning of December 2, age 63 years. He had been in poor health for months, but kept about until 10 days previous to his death.

A complete sketch of the life of the deceased would include the leading features of the florist trade of the national capital during the past 50 years. Reared in the business by his late father, for whom he was named, and who may be said to have put the florist industry of that city on its feet, John H. Small, Jr., as he was then called, was always alert for any new features of the business. If he had a hobby, it was good stock. Frequently he had said to the writer: "We are always willing to pay a good price, but we want good stock." He believed in a high standard for the craft and shaped his course accordingly. He was not understood by everyone. By some he was considered as being cold and self-contained, but when relaxed from the strain of business, he was kind, cordial and warm hearted.

As previously stated, he was born in Washington and from boyhood had been active in the business, taking his father's place in the management when infirmities of age incapacitated the latter, and at the time of his death became the head of the organization. Some years previous to this, another store was opened in New York, the business there being continued to the present time under the management of Charles Albert Small, a brother. At the opening of this fine new establishment at Madison avenue and 52nd street, John H. Small was present and a report of the event with illustrations appeared in THE AMERICAN FLORIST at that time.

John Henry Small stood high in the Masonic fraternity, being Past Grand Master of the District of Columbia. In his activity in raising funds for the building of a Masonic temple in Washington some years ago, he overworked himself and was compelled to go away for a short time to recuperate. To the appeals of churches and charitable organizations he was always a liberal contributor. He was prominently identified with numerous banking and commercial organizations.

He is survived by a widow and three children: Lieut. J. H. Small, Jr., U. S. A., now in France; Mrs. Small Slemen and Mrs. H. B. Leary; by one brother, Charles Albert Small, and by several sisters.

A. F. FAULKNER.

Corporal Raymond C. Thoires.

Corporal Raymond C. Thoires, son of James M. Thoires, 524 Market street, Camden, N. J., died in a hospital in France, October 4, from shrapnel wounds received in battle. Young Thoires enlisted in the 104th regiment of engineers of Camden, when just past his twenty-first birthday. He was trained at Anniston, Ala., and went overseas in June last. Notice of his death was not received until November 24.

The deceased was one of the best liked young men in Camden. He was associated with his father in business and was active in church work. He was a member of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, and very popular, his bright disposition making him friends everywhere.

K.

Private Jens Christian Peterson.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of Private Jens Christian Peterson, beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Peterson, 3132 McHenry avenue, Westwood, Cincinnati, O., to whom is extended the heartfelt sympathy of their many friends in the trade.

Private Peterson, who was a member of Co. H. 35th United States Infantry, passed away at Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex., of double pneumonia, November 25, age 25 years. He had been at Camp Travis for a short time, his company having been ordered overseas. It was his great ambition to go to France, and but for the armistice his hopes would doubtless have been realized. He was a popular young man with a promising future and his death in the prime of early vigor will be mourned by many friends.

Patrick Donigan.

Patrick Donigan, who had been a salesman in the wholesale district of New York since the business was in its infancy, was found dead in his bed on the morning of December 2. He was apparently in good health when he retired on the previous evening. He was about 60 years old.

Our first record of him is when he worked for James Hart, the pioneer of the wholesale business in New York. Later, he was for 10 years with Ford Brothers, and when that firm dissolved, he continued with M. C. Ford for over eight years. A short time ago, he took a position with Joseph J. Levy, 56 West 26th street. He was unassuming and faithful, and was well liked by his employers and the trade in general.

A. F. F.

Herman Kurth.

Herman Kurth, aged 29 years, for a long time with Reed & Keller, Inc., New York, well-known dealers in florists' supplies, in the capacity of traveling representative, died of pneumonia November 24, at his home, Union Hill, N. J. He was well liked by his kind and his associates because of his kind and courteous disposition.

MINSTRELOE supply this season appears to be quite limited.

IMMORETTES are scarce and dear and not always of good size or quality.

EASTER falls on April 20 next year, almost three weeks later than last Easter.

Boxwood is very scarce. Florists who need this would do well to secure their supply early from reliable sources.

The Changing Outlook.

Many florists, extremely pessimistic, and rightfully so from July to October, now enthusiastic over prospects for the coming months, are providing all stocks which will insure them flowers and plants to care for a good big trade.

LILY OF THE VALLEY may be used to take the place of white Roman hyacinths, scarce and dear. So far there is no news of new crop lily of the valley or lilies.

Chrysanthemum Society of America.

Society of American Florists.

The officers of the various florists' clubs and societies are reminded that if their organizations can qualify for representation upon the executive board of the Society of American Florists, evidence of qualification in accordance with by-law 2, section 2 (a) must be in the hands of the secretary before January 1 next. It is necessary, under the by-law, that a complete list of membership of an affiliating organization be presented, together with a certified copy of a resolution passed by the body, expressing a desire for such representation.

JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

Florists Should Get Share.

Dun's review of Chicago trade says: "Retail business in the last two weeks has been gaining momentum steadily until now it is as large or larger than ever, with prospects that these conditions will continue through the holidays. Although it is rather early for the heaviest Christmas rush, shops are crowded. The change in the character of the buying is most noticeable, and many lines, such as evening clothes and more expensive grades of wearing apparel, knick-knacks, toys and others of recently much exploited 'nonessentials,' have come into their own with the removal of restrictions, governmental and conscientious."

Express Rate Increases.

The advance in rates on express lines under federal control, expected to produce $24,000,000 additional revenue annually, provides that north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers and east of the Mississippi, the increase in merchandise rates ranges from 16 to 17 cents per 100 pounds, regardless of distance hauled in that territory. The increase in the balance of the United States will range from 10 to 12 cents per 100 pounds on merchandise. Increase in rates on food products will be about three-fourths the increase in those for merchandise.

Thanksgiving Trade.

The volume of 1918 Thanksgiving business, according to reports received, seems to have been limited only by the supply of stock on hand, the stores experiencing an early cleanup in almost every instance of cut flowers and plants, the latter saving the day in many cases where the limited offerings of the former were quickly depleted. Prices as a rule were unusually good and were paid without complaint. Chrysanthemums easily led the demand as in former years, while pompons proved more popular than ever. Roses in all grades and varieties sold well and carnations brought exceptionally good returns considering the quality of the flowers offered, the receipts being of small proportions. Everything considered, general results were very satisfactory, and in many cases total sales exceeded those of any previous year.

Madison, N. J.

The Noe family of Madison has established a fine reputation as rose growers, particularly in American Beauties. From the extent of their glass, they have long supplied the New York market with a large share of its American Beauties. In addition to his partnership with Joseph Ruzicka, Louis A. Noe owns a large range in his own right and an interest in two other large ranges. The business was founded many years ago by the late Louis M. Noe, father of Louis A. Noe. Joseph Ruzicka has, we believe, been with the Noes ever since he was a boy. He is a fine grower and an all around good man. He was born in Bohemia, but is one hundred per cent American. The entire product of the Noe ranges and the Noe & Ruzicka range is sold in the rooms of the New York Cut Flower Company by Matthew Sampson, Jr., who is one of the directors of that company.

When the Duckham-Pierson Company, over a year ago, started to build a large area of glass and fitted up their range in the most modern style, some of the wise ones thought they were taking a great risk, and it did look that way, but they have made good and been favored by the then unforeseen events. Excepting American Beauties, they grow all the leading varieties of roses and their stock is fine and blooming freely. Their Russells, Columbias, Ophelias, Hadleys, Double White Killarneys, and Wards are particularly noteworthy.

As proof that the florists, as a rule, are not easily discouraged, we have found that the leading growers of this city went right ahead during the summer in planting and caring for their stock, which is now in fine condition, and they have the satisfaction of knowing that they will get a needful supply of No. 1 buckwheat anthracite and bituminous coal. A number of them already have good supplies. The No. 1 buckwheat makes a hot fire if properly handled, that is, spread evenly and not too thick over a layer of ashes on the grates.

Anthony Ruzicka, who went into business for himself in this city about two years ago, has a fine stock of Ophelia and other leading varieties of roses. Previous to embarking for himself, he had held important positions as foreman in large ranges, having been six years with the Noes, a number of years with L. B. Coddington, and later with the Rowatons, Conn., Greenhouses.

The Charles H. Totty Company, having scored a series of successes in the fall shows with a great variety of chrysanthemums and their roses, Premier and Columbia, is now busily engaged in propagating a great stock of Premier to fill their enormous orders. Noe & Ruzicka have ordered 10,000 plants of this rose.

Noe & Ruzicka, who several years ago bought the Brant range, and spent a large sum on it in additions and repairs, have an exceptionally fine stock of American Beauty, Columbia, Hadley and Ophelia roses and are now cutting a good crop.

Henry Hentz, Jr., specializes in American Beauties and has fine stock. He is also a member of the firm of Hentz & Nash, Inc., of New York, and a member of the Bedford Flower Company, which has an extension range at Bedford Hills, N. Y.

R. B. Holmes has a good variety of roses, his Russells and Columbias being fine.

A. F. F.

Washington, D. C.

STOCK IS UNUSUALLY SCARCE.

"There is a general shortage of all kinds of flowers in face of an increasing demand," said a leading Washington florist to the local correspondent of THE AMERICAN FLORIST. "Many of the retailers are finding it difficult to get enough flowers to make a showing in their ice boxes. We are selling flowers that in previous years we would have been ashamed to offer, let alone ask the prices that we must now get. Small bunches of pompons cost 50 cents each at wholesale, and you cannot always get adequate stocks of these. In previous years, with the arrival of Thanksgiving day, these hung fire and nobody wanted them. Now it is found they relieve the general situation. Roses are very scarce, and there are not enough to go around. Orders are placed well in advance of their arrival in the market when it is possible to get wholesalers or growers to accept orders with anything like an assurance of their being filled. The roses that are offered are very good. Hadleys are selling at $35 per 100. Marylands are fine and coming with two-foot stems, which bring $15. Ophelia holds its own at $12.50. Small roses are popular for corsage work. Single violets are in big demand. They are prime favorites in this city, and their sale greatly surpasses that of the double violets. This year the doubles are highly unsatisfactory. They come by parcel post and are greatly delayed in transit, being heated up when received and shatter quickly. Small flowers of all kinds are welcomed and they sell well. Pansies, stevia, mignonette, etc. fill out the stocks. I look for a big winter business, but it will depend very largely on our ability to get flowers." B. F. L.

A Reconstruction Period—

Reconstruction is the watchword of today.

The florists' business must undergo changes to conform with the new order of things.

Old and unprofitable varieties must make way for the new and profitable ones.

The increased cost of production demands it.

We therefore submit for your consideration three grand novelties of proven merit.

THANKSGIVING SUPPLY EXHAUSTED EARLY.

The market was well supplied with Thanksgiving stock but the retailers ran out early in the day as the demand was far ahead of expectations. In pot plants, the demand was so heavy, that some growers had to cut into the Christmas supply to a point where color was just showing. In cut flowers, Bonnaffon was the big seller and the quality was superb. Roses and carnations were not in very large supply and they sold out quickly. Orchids, sweet peas and excellent stevia were included in the offerings.

NOTES.

The Wm. L. Rock Flower Co. reports one of the largest Thanksgiving demands it ever had and sold immense quantities of cut flowers and plants. Made up baskets moved well and there was a brisk call during the week for funeral work.

The Peterson Floral Co. is more than pleased with business. They say the "Deer" advertisement brought wonderful results. They think the text is as good as Phil Foley's experience in going fishing and catching a bear.

W. J. Barnes reports the heaviest Thanksgiving trade since he has been in business. His supply cleaned up early and he had to draw on his Christmas begonias when pot chrysanthemums ran out.

Arthur Newell says he never had a holiday trade that was handled as satisfactorily. Buyers were easily pleased and fancy stock moved well. He has had a big run of funeral work.

H. Kusik & Co. handled the largest supply of chrysanthemums during the week in their history. A cleanup resulted and more could have been moved had they been available.

Charles Thomas, of the Rosery, said his greatest difficulty was to get enough stock, as the demand was far beyond his expectations.

A. F. Barbe grew more chrysanthemums this year than ever before, disposed of them easier and got better returns.

T. J. Noll & Co. passed through one of their heaviest week's business. They sold out clean.

The Oakwood Floral Co. did not cut as heavily on roses as expected, due to cloudy weather.

THANKSGIVING TRADE HEAVY.

The Thanksgiving trade was exceptionally heavy this year with the sales equal to those of 1917 and in some instances very much better, which is remarkable considering the great shortage of stock. Everything in cut flower cleaned up completely at high prices at an early hour and the demand in general was so heavy that it was impossible to fill anywhere near all the orders. Carnations were exceedingly scarce and commanded regular Christmas prices. Chrysanthemums were probably never in such short supply for Thanksgiving as this year and the grower probably never received such high returns for the quality of the stock he cut. Poinsettias were in fairly good supply and cleaned up quickly at high figures. Roses were also on the short side and it was impossible to fill anywhere near the demand. Sweet peas were practically off crop and the supply of violets was quite scant. Calendulas, snapdragons, mignonette, Paper White narcissus, daisies, stevia, pansies, gardenias, orchids, lily of the valley and lilies also cleaned up quickly at surprisingly good Thanksgiving prices. The market was bare when the rush was over and the dealers were well satisfied with the total sales but regretted the fact that they were unable to take better care of their customers owing to the extreme scarcity of stock as was predicted in these columns in the last three issues. The writer advised everyone in the November 16 issue to place their orders immediately as prices would advance over the advertised quotations which they did on almost all items with the possible exception of fancy long stemmed roses. Green goods were in heavy demand but there was plenty to go around. Stock at this writing is as scarce if not more so than for Thanksgiving and is cleaning up in all lines at high prices.

THANKSGIVING IN THE RETAIL STORES.

The local retail florists report a good Thanksgiving trade which was about equal and in some instances better than that of 1917. The heavy rain on Thanksgiving day affected business to a great extent, especially as far as the loop stores were concerned. Stock was exceedingly scarce and high in price this year, consequently very few were caught with much stock left on hand, owing to the rain, and those who were are not complaining, for prices in the wholesale market were as high if not higher than they were before Thanksgiving. Roses sold at high figures, especially fancy American Beauty, which brought $12 and $15 per dozen retail. Mrs. Chas. Russell, Columbia, Milady, Hoosier Beauty and in fact all the other varieties available sold at high prices and while a few of the customers complained of the cost, the majority of them paid the price. Carnations were exceptionally scarce and high this year and very few were offered. Chrysanthemums and poinsettias were the leaders everywhere. They were not any too plentiful but saved the day, owing to the extreme scarcity of all other stock, especially pot plants, which were practically out of the market with the possible exception of a limited supply of cyclamen. Sweet peas, orchids, gardenias, lily of the valley, violets, snapdragons, calendulas, daisies, stevia, mignonette, Paper White narcissus and other miscellaneous stock sold at high prices, most of which came in handy for basket work and gave one an opportunity to make the customer believe he was receiving his money's worth. The only complaint heard on all sides was over the same period of 1917. Everyone is now devoting their spare time to getting things in shape for Christmas, which is only a short ways off and everyone is expecting it to be the greatest ever, if not the best in years

NOTES.

John Welsh, Sr., and wife, 4910 North Hoyne avenue, have the sympathy of the entire trade in the loss of their son, William, who died of pneumonia in France October 13, while serving with the colors. He was 27 years of age and was well known to the trade, having been in charge of his father's greenhouses for a number of years. He was one of the finest young men in the trade and a great help to his parents, who are heartbroken over his death, but proud of the gold star that will be a lasting monument to one who made the supreme sacrifice for his country and friends.

Larry Mathes who has been in the employ of Weiland & Rich since he was honorably discharged from the United States army early last spring left November 23 to accept a position with the J. M. Gasser Co. at Cleveland, O. He was with the Shotwell Floral Co., Fargo, N. D., for several years before he joined the colors but was employed here previously.

A. Lange reports that his Thanksgiving sales were greater than those Charles Richter, well known to the local trade through his connection with Wietor Bros., died at his home at 1031 Milwaukee avenue from pneumonia, Wednesday, November 27, at the age of 28. The funeral was held from the home the following Saturday, with services at St. Boniface church and burial at St. Boniface cemetery. He was with the colors at an eastern cantonment but was rejected on account of ill health, but was up and around until the day previous to his death. He leaves a brother known as "Butch" Richter, who is employed at A. Lange's East Madison street store.

Zech & Mann experienced the heaviest Thanksgiving business in the history of the firm, with a grand cleanup in all lines. Business has been exceptionally good since, with both a heavy local and out-of-town call for stock. Mr. Zech received a letter this week from A. F. Fitzsimmons, chairman of division 19 of the united war fund drive, thanking him for the splendid work he did in this connection in handling the campaign among the florists.

E. F. Winterson is well pleased with business the past year at the E. F. Winterson Co.'s store, which showed a great increase over 1917. Mr. Winterson has been on the job every minute of the day and has managed to keep things going in tip-top shape, even with a shortage of help. He is awaiting the return of his able assistant, Fred Krauss, who is with the American troops in France, and is holding his job open for him.

Andrew Chronis says that November was one of the best months the Alpha Floral Co. ever experienced and included a record breaking Thanksgiving trade. The people in general paid the high prices asked without any complaint on almost all stock, but usually selected something else in preference to carnations when pricing the stock.

W. G. Matthews, the well-known florist of Dayton, O., was here on a business and pleasure trip this week. He reports business as good and is optimistic in regard to the future, notwithstanding it is difficult at times to secure all the stock desired on account of the extreme scarcity existing for the past month or more.

George Weiland, president of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, is the proud father of a baby boy who arrived at his home in Evanston, December 1. He has five children, four boys and a girl, who are going to be florists and relieve him of the responsibility of the entire business in later years.

Kennicott Bros. Co.'s total sales for Thanksgiving were equal to those of 1917, which were by far the best this firm ever experienced. Mr. Kennicott was particularly well pleased with the result, which was doing remarkably well considering the general scarcity of stock in this as well as other markets.

Percy Jones, Inc., expected to have a big Thanksgiving business and did but it was greater than the proprietors even hoped for. Business has been exceedingly brisk at this house since Thanksgiving and Manager Van Gelder reports that their sales for November 30 established a new high record.

O. J. Friedman had a brisk Thanksgiving trade, with the sales showing a great increase over the same period in 1917. The highest prices in the history of the firm were realized this Thanksgiving, fancy American Beauty roses bringing $15 per dozen and chrysanthemums $12 per dozen.

Miss L. A. Tonner, of O. A. & L. A. Tonner, is back from a month's visit at Baconton, Ga., where she supervised the harvesting of the crops in her pecan groves. H. C. Wulbrandt and wife who also have a grove there returned with her by train after motoring down six weeks ago.

The Grossberg-Tyler-Finnermann Co. reports a brisk demand for artificial stock during the present scarcity of natural flowers. They have a splendid line of all items on display at their store which includes a wonderful reproduction of cattleyas and carnations.

N. J. Wietor reports that Wietor Bros.' Thanksgiving business was the best ever and was more than pleased with the total sales for this occasion. His firm was particularly strong on chrysanthemums and pompons, which sold quickly at high prices.

John Michelsen says that the E. C. Amling Co.'s trade for Thanksgiving exceeded all expectation, with the sales running way ahead of 1917. Business has been so good since Thanksgiving that everything is cleaning up as quickly as it arrives.

Kyle & Foerster are more than pleased with their Thanksgiving business, which exceeded all expectations. Their sales for Saturday, November 30, were the largest ever experienced for any other one day outside of the holiday period.

Charles Kruchten, brother of John Kruchten and Henry Kruchten, and son of Nic Kruchten, who is with the American troops in France, was safe according to reports received recently, although he had gone over the top several times.

Miller & Musser have had a good season and notwithstanding the general shortage of stock that has been experienced the past several months, find that their sales have increased considerably over the same period of 1917.

William Hembreiker, of Hembreiker & Cole, Springfield, was a welcome visitor this week, leaving December 3 for Joliet. He says that business has been unusually good with his firm this year, which was the greatest ever recorded.

Tom Conlon, superintendent of Poehlmann Bros. Co.'s plant department at Morton Grove for many years, has taken a position as gardener with J. F. Tilt, wealthy shoe man, who has large conservatories on the north side.

The Batavia Greenhouse Co. is having a good call for American Beauty roses, which it grows on a large scale. Fancy stevia is attracting the attention of the buyers at this store.

D. D. P. Roy is now with the American Bulb Co.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. had the best Thanksgiving trade it ever experienced since it has been in business, and the only complaint the proprietors have to make is that stock in general was so scarce that all the orders could not be filled as completely as desired. Otto W. Freese, manager of the cut flower department, visited the greenhouses at Morton Grove, December 3, to get a line on stock for Christmas and brought back the report that the outlook is very encouraging for a very satisfactory cut of roses and carnations, which will all be needed if the demand is anywhere as good then as it was for Thanksgiving, and the indications are that it will be.

Erne & Company had their share of the Thanksgiving business and were fortunate in having a good supply of late chrysanthemums and pompons in addition to their regular line to supply their customers with. This firm's business has increased to such an extent that they are rapidly outgrowing their present quarters.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. are more than pleased with their Thanksgiving business, which was being exceedingly brisk and cleaned up all the available stock. Mr. Pyfer is expecting the arrival of a large shipment of red winter berries this week, which are rather late in making their appearance this season.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association reports a record Thanksgiving trade, with the best November ever experienced. This firm is handling a large supply of late chrysanthemums, which include particularly fine Helen Frick and Jennie Nonin. Fancy orchids are in brisk demand here.

J. A. Budlong had a brisk Thanksgiving trade which was the best ever and kept the force on the jump at all times. Roses have been in good supply at this house the past few months and have brought unusually high prices all through the fall season compared to other years.

Peter Reinberg took care of all of his regular customers in fine shape for Thanksgiving, notwithstanding the great scarcity of stock. Carnations are arriving in larger supply here but the demand is so strong for them that there is never a surplus.

The John Kruchten Co. report that November was the best month in the history of the firm, due to a record-breaking Thanksgiving and a heavy day November 30. December 2 was a record-breaker and better than the previous Saturday.

C. L. Washburn says that trade is so brisk at Bassett & Washburn's store that it is impossible to fill more than half the orders, owing to the great scarcity of stock. Their Thanksgiving sales were away ahead of last year.

Hoerber Bros. had a good cut of fancy chrysanthemums to offer for Thanksgiving, which had considerable to do in making it the best the firm ever recorded. Some fine roses are now recorded at this establishment.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. report a heavy Thanksgiving business, with the sales comparing most favorably with those of last year. Some exceptionally fine boxwood is arriving regularly in quantity at this establishment.

George Reinberg is cutting quite heavily in roses, which are worth more money now than they were before Thanksgiving and are cleaning up early.

O. A. & L. A. Tonner report that their total sales for Thanksgiving were three times greater than those of the same period of 1917.

George Mohn, of Vaughan's Seed Store, is confined to his home with influenza.

Gottfried Amling, well-known resident of Forest Park, died Monday, December 2, at the age of 87. He was born in Germany, but spent the greater part of his life in this country, where he was a valued and respected citizen in the community in which he lived. He was the father of E. C. Amling, the well-known wholesaler, W. H. Amling and A. F. Amling, well-known growers at Maywood, Herman Amling, Mrs. Belling and Mrs. Dreschler, of Oak Park, and Mrs. Henry Wehrmann, wife of another of Maywood's leading growers. The funeral was held from his late home in Forest Park, December 5, with interment at Concordia cemetery. It was largely attended, and the floral offerings, which were many and beautiful, included a large number from various firms in the trade.

In the bankruptcy proceedings of Pyfer & Olsem, the Central Trust Company of Illinois, trustee, has filed a petition for an order to sell certain real estate and other property, a hearing on which will be had in the office of the referee in bankruptcy, 907 Monadnock block, December 12, at 10 a. m.

Weiland & Risch are cutting a good supply of roses and carnations which clean up right along at high figures. The rose Mrs. Bayard Thayer is in exceptionally heavy demand and the variety Champ Weiland, which originated with them, is more than holding its own with the other offerings.

Eric Johnson, manager of the A. L. Randall Co.'s cut flower department, has no complaint to make in regard to Thanksgiving business, which was the heaviest ever and absorbed all the stock on hand. Pompons were a leader here and sold as quickly as they were unpacked.

Joseph Ziska & Sons' wire department is working overtime to keep up with the orders, which are so numerous that a couple of competent men can find immediate employment here.

Allie Zech received a card this week announcing the arrival of 11a Fern, seven and one-half pounds, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. Williams, South Bend, Ind., December 1.

C. O. Wilcox, who covered the south for the W. W. Barnard Co., for many years, joined the traveling force of Wood-Stubbs & Co., Louisville, Ky., December 2.

GOOD SALES AND PRICES HIGH.

The Thanksgiving demand in this city was very good, giving a distinct indication of the permanent revival of old-time pre-war business. There was an immense supply of chrysanthemums on hand, as well as roses of all grades and varieties to suit the most fastidious buyers, and while the necessarily stiff prices deterred some, the line of purchasers continued until the downpour of rain Thursday dampened their ardor. Chrysanthemums led in popularity, although many roses were sold. Carnations were rather scarce and cannot be said to be a factor thus far this fall. The heavy chrysanthemum cut of the week made great inroads on the stock intended for later use and in consequence a shortage is already in sight for the early part of this month. The big peace parade, scheduled for Thanksgiving day could not be held on account of the inclement weather and some of the features included some floral work that the florists were to be favored with. Active preparations are being made by retailers for Christmas and big lines of artificial work will appear for the event. Flowering plants in considerable variety are promised by local growers and some foreign stock will find a market here.

NOTES.

Thomas Browne, whose Hudson car was stolen last July, was able to get possession of it again at Dayton, O., last week and he and Frank Walling made the trip to effect its return.

VERY GOOD THANKSGIVING BUSINESS.

No greater was the rush of the football players on Thanksgiving day than that of the flower buyers for white and yellow chrysanthemums for the occasion. It started the previous day and all hands were busy waiting on the trade and buyers seemed to fear they would get left in the distribution, evidently having taken warning from former Thanksgiving days and they did their shopping early. The florists were well prepared and the shops were beauty places. Some magnificent blooms were on sale and brought top prices. The best sold easily at $9 per dozen and even at that price people clamored for them. The football field seemed to be a divided mass of gold and black and white and purple. The demand continued until there was practically a cleanup and the chrysanthemum was but a memory. By almost unanimous consent the local growers have allowed the violet to go by. The war and extreme labor conditions in this city have made it impossible for this flower to get proper attention at the proper season. Roses and carnations are now very fine and lilies are again becoming prominent in the daily cut. There is some talk here, although it could hardly be said to be complaint, about the unusually high prices of all kinds of flowers in the wholesale markets which naturally is reflected in retail sales. The Thanksgiving trade was fully 50 per cent better than last year according to general report.

NOTES.

The Joy Floral Co. reports a splendid day and were well prepared to meet the demand. The window decorations here were specially pleasing and attracted much attention, one with immense golden chrysanthemums in large vases against a background of black velvet, the other with white chrysanthemums with purple plush.

This firm has a new pink carnation sport, showing a sprinkling of white, a flower large in size and perfect in form. Orchids are also in bloom at their establishment and find ready sale for corsage bouquets. There was a fine sale of plants for the Thanksgiving trade.

Gentry Bros. had a beautiful window of flowers and plants, all in yellow and white with ribbon loops and streamers overhead. With the exception of a few less choice plants and some cut stock everything cleaned up nicely. This firm is having a fine cut of American Beauty. All of their roses are going well.

Louis Haury, Jr., had the field all to himself in the market house the day before Thanksgiving. In addition to a full stall, he had a wagonload of fine begonias, ferns, geraniums, etc., and his sales were unusually good.

The McIntyre Floral Co. had a big trade, with an ample supply of chrysanthemums, orchids and roses for the heavy call. A fine cut of carnations is now coming in from this range.

SHORT SUPPLY LIMITS SALES.

The Thanksgiving demand, this year, was all that could have been wished for, but the supply was far from being adequate, and it was for this reason that the reports of the Thanksgiving day trade for 1918 are not so good as the florists here would like. The late chrysanthemums, especially, fell far short of the necessary quantity, and the quality, also, was poor, in comparison with the Thanksgiving stock of other years. Chadwick, Eaton, Jones, Bonaffon, and Turner were the principal varieties offered, and the prices asked for them were entirely out of proportion to the quality of the blooms. Nothing sold under $4 per dozen, and most of them were priced higher. Pompons were little better in quality, and sold for $1 and $1.50 per dozen. Carnations brought $1.25 and $1.50 per dozen, and were almost impossible to obtain. Some very fine Ophelia, Columbia and Hoosier Beauty roses were in the market. Violets were never so short in supply before. An excellent line of blooming plants helped considerably in the shortage of cut flowers. Business since the holiday has been very good, with a number of weddings, and a large amount of funeral work to keep everyone in the craft busy.

NOTES.

The Doswell Floral Co. reports an increase in the demand for Thanksgiving, but that it was met wherever possible with flowering plants in the place of cut flowers, which were at a premium. Mrs. R. W. Doswell has returned to the store after a several months' absence on account of illness.

A heavier demand than ever before, is the report of the Flick Floral Co. on the Thanksgiving day business. This firm had an immense number of designs, including a casket blanket for out-of-town funerals, and also several weddings throughout Thanksgiving week.

That the scarcity of stock would hardly bring the Thanksgiving business up to last year, is the report of Ed Wenninghoff. He reports stock of all kinds hard to obtain for this holiday, with the exception of flowering plants, and says these sold exceedingly well.

W. J. & M. S. Vesey report a big increase in the Thanksgiving day demand this year over last, and, although they cut quantities of roses, lilies, chrysanthemums, and carnations, they were unable to meet the heavy demand.

In addition to their heavy Thanksgiving trade, the Freese Floral Co. had an elaborate wedding on Thanksgiving day, which included church and house decoration, and bouquets for the bride and six attendants. H. K.

BUSINESS MEETS EXPECTATIONS.

With a fair supply of stock and prices rather high, the Thanksgiving day trade was up to anticipations. Everything was cleaned up by Wednesday evening and the wholesale houses did not open the following day, there being nothing left to offer. All orders were cut down considerably. There was an excellent call for large chrysanthemums, including Chadwick, Dean, Golden Wedding and Bonnafton. Pompons, as usual, were quickly disposed of. They were possibly the most plentiful of all the offerings. Carnations were scarce and will be for some time to come. Sweet peas are now arriving in larger numbers and the supply of Easter lilies is improving. Orchids enjoyed a good call and roses cleaned up early. Greens are about equal to requirements. Christmas goods are now beginning to make their appearance in the wholesale houses in a varied assortment.

NOTES.

Sergeant Carl Witthuhn, brother of Walter Witthuhn, has been gassed and is recovering in a hospital in France, and Walter Harlick, formerly with the Cleveland Florists' Exchange, has been wounded in action, degree undetermined.

The Cleveland Plant & Flower Co. is handling a fine line of orchids. This firm's supply of boxwood and southern smilax for the Christmas trade is also very good.

THANKSGIVING SUPPLY BELOW NORMAL.

The feature of the past week was the scarcity of flowers, particularly roses, which were at least 50 per cent below normal production for Thanksgiving. This scarcity is thought to be due to the great demand in October when many beds are generally pinched to come into crop the last of November. This condition, it is said, will continue, as all efforts are directed towards getting the best results for the holidays, when it is expected record prices will prevail. There was the usual big demand for chrysanthemums, which considering their heavy sale from the first, was met with a very good supply, particularly of the pompons, of which Mrs. Frank Beu, was most popular. Jennie Nonin, the Chadwicks, Bonnaffon, and Seidewitz were the large flowered varieties. Five and six dollars was the wholesale price for all specials with a clean crop at these figures. Carnations were in fair supply, and the best brought $8. Deep pink are particularly scarce; the proportion of Mrs. Ward to white is about 1 to 10. There were good offerings of calendulas, snapdragons, sweet peas, stevia and other small flowers, but the demand cleaned up everything at record prices. Easter lilies and callas were also taken at good figures. Violets jumped to $1.50 a hundred and cattleyas to 75 cents. The wholesale houses had a very heavy out-of-town demand and were united in the statement that they could have sold much more stock had it been obtainable. Pot chrysanthemums sold well, many being cut off as they furnished a grade of flowers that fitted the modest purses. The street men were not so much in evidence on Thanksgiving day. The football games were not important, and a rain, which set in at noon, lasted the day out. Wholesale men say that even under these circumstances they paid better prices for choice chrysanthemums than the stores.

December 2.—The receipts of all stocks of cut flowers is at least from 15 to 20 per cent below normal. Roses, particularly, are wanting, except American Beauties, which are more than equal to the demand. Carnations are nearer to expectation than any other standard stock, but all of high grade bring eight cents. There are a few Jennie Nonin and pompon chrysanthemums. Prices on all stocks are at least 10 per cent higher.

CLUB MEETING.

The regular meeting of the florists' club was held at the Adelphia hotel, December 3, there being a good attendance and great interest was manifested in the proceedings. Mark P. Mills sent in his resignation as president, which was accepted, Edmund A. Harvey was unanimously elected to fill the post, and A. A. Niessen and John Habermehl were nominated for vice president. J. Otto Thilow read his paper on "The Florists' Business in Wartime," a record of many years and full of optimism. He predicted a bright prospect for the craft in the immediate future. Among the visitors present from out of town were William F. and Adolph Gude, Washington, D. C.; Charles A. Dards, New York; John F. Horn, Allentown, Pa.

coming flowers to be relied upon are increased stocks of roses, carnations, callas, sweet peas, calendulas and snapdragons. Cold storage giganteums should begin to diminish from now on, many claiming the cut after January 1 from held over bulbs will not pay. Paper Whites will be seen in fair quantities, but at higher prices. It would seem as if tulips and Dutch hyacinths would be good crops for cut flowers, tulips particularly being popular, and which should easily bring higher figures to compensate for the increased cost of the bulbs. There will be a good assortment of flowering plants for the holidays, which in both quality and quantity, considering the handicaps of the past year, are a great credit to the growers. Cyclamens, poinsettias, begonias, heather, solanums, as well as celestial and birds eye peppers, are seen in the various stocks in fine shape for Christmas sales. Thanksgiving business was very good with the Leo Niessen Co. The supply of flowers was not equal to the demand, however, and prices advanced from 20 to 25 per cent. Out-of-town business was particularly strong. Chrysanthemums were a great factor. Roses were scarce, but carnations are in fair supply. American Beauty roses, Easter lilies and carnations are leaders at this time.

James M. Thoires, Camden, received notice, November 24, that his son, Raymond, a corporal in the army, had died October 5, from wounds received in battle. Now that the war is over, his father had been looking forward to his early return, and the sad news was a great shock to his family and the trade, who sympathize with him to the fullest extent.

Charles E. Meehan is of the opinion that the growers who have successfully overcome the many handicaps of the past year, and have their houses running to anything like capacity, will be amply rewarded, as flowers will bring high prices for the balance of the season.

Wm. J. Baker has demonstrated to his satisfaction that if calla stems are cut with a slant, instead of straight across, they will not split and curl as they often do when kept for any length of time in jars of water.

George Craig finds that while no two growers agree on the culture of their various plants and cut flowers, yet they appear to be unanimous in that they must get higher prices for their product this year.

Edward Dorheim is now back with Berger Bros. His former position here was given up to go into the growing end, but he believes now that he would rather handle flowers than grow them.

The Philadelphia Wholesale Florists' Exchange was fortunate in having good rose shipments and did a heavy Thanksgiving business. Chrysanthemums and carnations were also quantity stocks.

"Everything to be thankful for," was the good word with Edward Reid. Roses and carnations were quantity stocks. Chrysanthemums had a good cleanup. Cattleyas were a feature.

At H. Bayersdorfer & Co.'s, every kind of material for Christmas house or cemetery wreaths is in great demand. Extra hands are necessary to keep up with the orders.

Jos. G. Neidinger reports an unusual demand for red Christmas wreaths, also magnolia leaves to make up into cemetery wreaths, as well as crepe flowers to decorate them.

The Robert Craig Co. is now working overtime in getting out their Christmas plant orders. They have an enormous stock to move during the next three weeks.

Berger Bros. had a good cleanup and could have sold much more stock. Choice chrysanthemums, Easter lilies and carnations are features.

Samuel Lilley declares the Enchantress is still the only sure money maker in carnations from the grower's standpoint.

THANKSGIVING SALES EXCEED 1917.

With plenty of stock, fair weather, and fair prices, though some of the retailers thought that prices were high, the Thanksgiving business was good, better than last year, and also exceeding some previous years. Doubtless the cessation of hostilities on the fields of Europe has brought great relief to the minds of the people, and though householders paid "war prices" for their turkey and "fixins," many homes were thrown open to soldiers and sailors, which created a demand for table flowers that in the aggregate was good for business. In the wholesale district, most of the buying was done on November 26 and 27. On those mornings, the Cut Flower Exchange opened for business at 5 a. m., and the other dealers, as a rule, a little earlier, and closed one or two hours later than usual. Roses and chrysanthemums led the market. There was, of course, a call for other stock, but the heaviest buying was as above stated. The pompon and single chrysanthemums are now in such variety that most all tastes can be pleased, and roses will sell, if anything sells. Though carnations and violets brought good figures for a time, $8 per 100 for carnations and $1.50 for violets, the call for them was slower than it has sometimes been, and white carnations by Thanksgiving were a drug. Many of the violets were poor and were being sold by street boys on Thanksgiving morning. The best Hadley roses on the market wholesaled at the rate of $35 and $40 per 100; Mrs. Chas. Russell, $20; special Columbia and Ophelia, $20 to $25; American Beauties, special, did not go above $75. Orchids were a disappointment. Cattleyas started at 75 cents and $1 per flower, but by Thanksgiving, quantities of fair stock could be bought for 50 cents and less. If violets are to have any standing in this market they must be of better quality than the bulk of what arrived for Thanksgiving. A lot of them would shake off when taken from the boxes, and were practically worthless. In recent years, a decline in the call for violets has been noticed, but some good ones will always sell. Growers and wholesalers may as well get wise to the fact that starting poor violets at $1.25 to $1.50 per 100 will not sell many of them. Stevia and mignonette, lilies and lily of the valley were slow. Roses were in lighter supply than they have sometimes been, and a few wholesalers think they should have moved better, but on the whole, one can find no reasonable ground for complaint. It was a good Thanksgiving, and in the light—or darkness—of past events, there is reason for thankfulness.

December 2.—The weather is cold, the supply of stock moderate and prices are holding firm with but little change from those of Thanksgiving.

AMONG THE WHOLESALEERS.

E. J. Van Reyper, of Geo. Seibrecht's: "Everything went well, with the exception of white carnations."

Frank Traendly, of Traendly & Schenck, said that business was good—never better.

Clarence Slinn, who handles many violets, was disappointed with their poor quality.

Paul Rigo, manager for the Henshaw Floral Co., said that business was very good.

J. S. Fenrick said that everything went all right, but white carnations.

D. J. Pappas, of the United Cut Flower Co.: "Good business."

Percy B. Rigby, of S. S. Pennock Co.: "Very good."

BUSINESS IN THE RETAIL STORES.

Retailers who have been for years in business and have good family trade, reported better sales than last year, and several said it was the best Thanksgiving they ever had. Orders from families are usually sent in a day or two ahead of a holiday. On Broadway, which may be called everybody's thoroughfare, there are between 42nd and 181st street, between 30 and 40 retail stores. On Thanksgiving day, up to 2 p. m., the majority of these stores were crowded with customers buying bunches. Many of the purchases were small, but in the aggregate they were a great help to the trade. The weather throughout the week was fair and cool, up to the afternoon of Thanksgiving, when a drizzling rain set in, but by that time business was about over.

Malandre Brothers, Broadway and 72nd street, had exceptionally fine business. In their show window they had arranged a handsome dinner table decoration. As hostess, "Miss Liberty"—life-sized figure—was gay in draperies of the national colors. Opposite her was a soldier in khaki, also life-size. A profusion of fine flowers were on the table and in the fore and backgrounds.

The Colonial Florist, whose main store is at Broadway and 157th street, with four more stores in different parts of the city, said he had excellent business. On Thanksgiving day, his main store was crowded with customers until closing time.

The Astoria Florist, Broadway and 77th street, said it was the best Thanksgiving business he ever had, and he has been there for quite a number of years.

Ralph Armstrong, of Madison avenue, who has been in business there for the past seven years, and was previously with Wadley & Smythe for seven years, said it was the best Thanksgiving business he had ever seen.

At the Dards Store it was stated that business had been excellent. This store made a fine display of poinsettias in pans and other good plant stock. There was considerable business in chrysanthemum plants.

Amsterdam avenue has but few florists, most of its trade going to Broadway, but C. A. Ladiges has a good store at No. 1792. He said that his Thanksgiving business had been "all right."

The Claremont Florists, 3185 Broadway, state they had good Thanksgiving business. They had a fine cut of chrysanthemums from the greenhouses at Morsemere, N. J.

J. G. Leikens, Madison avenue and 55th street, said that the business exceeded his expectations, being better than ever before at a Thanksgiving.

At the store of David Clarke's Sons, Broadway and 75th street, which has a fine family trade, business was excellent and equal to former years.

Peter Theopine, manager of the Boulevard Floral Co., Broadway near 86th street, said that their business was much better than last year.

Charles Albert Small, of J. H. Small & Sons, Madison avenue and 52nd street, said that they had "very good business."

At Henry Hart's, Madison avenue and 77th street, it was said to have been the greatest Thanksgiving trade they had ever had.

J. W. Hauser, Madison avenue and 56th street, said that business was better than last year.

NOTES.

It is not sacrilege to carry a revolver to church—if you are chasing a thief—for John Curry, the florist of 1118 Lexington avenue, is being highly commended for doing it. It came about in this way. Dr. Richard Kovac's big twin six touring car was stolen from in front of his house on the afternoon of November 30. Later, being called out on a professional visit, he took his runabout. While driving through 77th street, near Lexington avenue, he saw his stolen car standing there and a stranger seated in it. He stopped his runabout, jumped to the running board of the car and said: "What are you doing in my car?" For answer, the stranger presented a loaded revolver. The doctor got off, but in doing so he managed to shut off the gasoline from the tank to the engine. Enters John Curry. He was standing in front of his store and heard the conversation between the doctor and the thief and ran into the store and got his own revolver. The thief ran south in Lexington avenue with John and the doctor in pursuit, the former firing in the air. They ran him into the church of St. Joan Baptiste, where, assisted by two policemen, they captured him in the choir loft.

Every soldier and sailor of Manhattan, who died for his country in the great war, will have a memorial tree planted for him in Central park. On each tree, the name of the soldier or sailor for whom it is intended as a memorial, will be inscribed upon a bronze tablet. The tablet is to be designed and approved by the municipal art commission. The park department has already contracted for forty American elms, to be delivered for planting next spring. These trees will be planted along the avenue on the Mall, where the old trees are in bad condition and will be removed. The trees along the Mall are the only strictly formal planting in the park, so if any of the new planting should die they will be at once replaced by American elms.

Captain J. R. De Lamar, who died in Roosevelt hospital of pneumonia, December 1, was known in the horticultural trade of New York largely on account of the fine exhibits of plants, notably chrysanthemums, which his gardener, Robert Marshall, has in recent years placed in the shows of the Horticultural Society of New York. His estate is at Glen Cove, L. I. Captain De Lamar was born in Amsterdam, Holland, 75 years ago. His career had been adventurous; a shipmaster at the age of 23; a contractor at Vineyard Haven, Mass.; a Colorado miner, where he is said to have made more than $20,000,000, and finally, a Wall street operator, where he was known as the "Man of Mystery."

At a joint meeting of the flower show committees of the New York Florists' Club and the Horticultural Society of New York, held December 2, it was decided as inadvisable to hold a show in the spring of 1911. This decision was in part due to the difficulty in securing a suitable place to hold a show, the United States government having taken over the Grand Central Palace. It was practically decided to hold a show in the spring of 1920, and an active campaign will be inaugurated with that end in view.

Hession, of Madison avenue and 75th street, has received the news that George Holzschneider, who was his employe for many years, was killed in action, October 14. He was a bugler in the 30th Infantry. That is the third of Hession's former employes who have died in France, besides a nephew. The deaths of John W. Ellison, Andrew McCabe and John T. Hession, were reported in our issue of November 30.

For the two days of the past week following Thanksgiving, the supply of stock was light and though prices were easier there was no heavy drop. As a matter of course there was light buying, November 29, but the following day, being the end of the week, there was necessarily more stocking up and business was fair.

Philip Krebs, a well known grower of Orangeburg, Rockland county, N. Y., who sells his stock in the Cut Flower Exchange, was recently officially notified that his son, Charles W. Krebs, had been killed in action in France. Mr. Krebs has another son in the army. Charles was in the twenty-third year of his age.

McKenney, Fifth avenue and 42d street, reports an excellent Thanksgiving business. On December 2 he arranged fine designs and a pall of orchids and violets for the funeral of Jesse Lewisohn, a well known citizen.

The Interborough is constructing an exit from the Lexington avenue subway right at the door of Leo Klein's store, Lexington avenue and 60th street. Hereafter we expect Leo's window will be a grand exhibit of the finest stock in the market.

George Stathes, the retailer of 889 Columbus avenue, has been notified that one of his two sons who are with the American forces in France, has been severely wounded and is now in a hospital.

Secretary John Young went to Atlantic City, N. J., December 3, to attend a meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The Seed Trade

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Keadel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

AMERICA gladiolus bulbs are said to be harder to clean and put in shipping order than other sorts.

ED. GOLDENSTEIN, of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, is at his desk again after nearly a year's service at Camp Grant with the troops.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade December 4 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.75 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—D. I. Bushnell is returning from his New England vacation improved in health, although still somewhat weak, and expects to go south in December.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover closed 10 cents higher December 2 at $25.70, a drop of 60 cents during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents higher, selling at $5.00; December, $5.10; January, $5.25 and May $5.35.

THE United States government restrictions on the use of nitrate of soda for fertilizing purposes have been lifted. The nitrate committee, however, remain in control, and it is reported will continue to fix prices each month as before.

REFERRING to clover and timothy, C. A. King & Co., Toledo, O., say that the export demand will be a big factor in determining prices. Some dealers estimate sales of clover for export have been 15,000 bags. Delayed cables have greatly restricted business.

STATISTICS of imports and exports at the port of Amsterdam, show that seeds decreased in imports from 223,612 metric tons in 1915, to 136,120 in 1916, and 32,672 in 1917. In exports, the quantities were 50,156 tons in 1915, 17,729 in 1916 and 6,027 in 1917.

VISITED CHICAGO: Edwin Northrup, of Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, Minn., and Miss Isabel Northrup; Samuel Cole, Ventura, Calif., and his son, Lieut. C. A. Cole, who is with the forces at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Ky., the latter recuperating from the influenza.

BALTIMORE, Md.—Thorburn A. Bixler, for a number of years connected with the wholesale field seed trade, whose great great grandfather, Grant Thorburn, founded the firm of J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York, is now associated with J. Bolgiano & Son of this city.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Miss Josephine Helen Michell, daughter of Frederick J. Michell, of the H. F. Michell Co., was married November 20, to Walter G. Arader at St. Madeline's church, Ridley Park, Pa. The bride carried a shower bouquet of white roses and orchids.

CAPITOLA, CALIF.—The Brown Bull Ranch reports business more than satisfactory. Orders are being booked for 1919 delivery of Freesia Purity, God-freew and Aethopica callas, tulips, daffodils and sweet pea seed; also immediate delivery of gladioli and Calla Eliottiana bulbs.

Watch Your Step!

There never has been a time in recent years when it was more difficult to predict our business requirements than today. The natural and customary plan of purchasing a coming season's supply of various stocks by those of the preceding year, or an average of recent years, fails now, as many trials have proven. Care should be taken regarding every purchase of futures, both as to quantities and possibilities of market declines.

Peas and Beans.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 20

The way the bean crop is turning out in this state is somewhat of a disappointment. It is believed the average will not be over six bushels to the acre, which will not pay the farmers, as almost anything else they can grow will give them better returns. Our crops in other sections proved more satisfactory, but it seems to us that the large surplus that was expected is growing beautifully less, and in our opinion, all garden beans that have been grown this year will be needed for 1919 planting.

Pea crops have been very disappointing also and some varieties are very short.

A. J. BROWN SEED CO.

Fertilizer Regulation.

The appropriation of a sum adequate for the undertaking of investigations of commercial fertilizers is urged by Secretary Houston of the department of agriculture in his annual report, as well as the passage of legislation under which the government could secure to consumers proper protection against misbranded, adulterated and worthless fertilizers entering into interstate commerce.

"I am convinced that there is much indiscriminate use of commercial fertilizers in this country, and, therefore, much waste of money," he says. "This arises from the lack of available satisfactory data. Soils require careful treatment, just as does the human body. A number of states have conducted fertilizer experiments over a long period and have obtained and disseminated valuable information. Because of the importance of this matter for the whole Union, I believe that the federal government should participate in this work, and that an adequate sum should be made available to the department for co-operative experiments with state institutions."

B. F. L.

Vine and Corn Seed.

Fremont, Neb., Nov. 30, 1918.

Practically all of our cucumber, muskmelon and watermelon crops have been received, cucumber turning out fair yields on a limited acreage and a small crop of muskmelon with acreage also small. Watermelon shows fair production, but no large surplus, and a few varieties somewhat short. Pumpkin and squash are being harvested a little later than usual and only a few crops have been received to date. The work is now progressing, however, and we hope to receive advice of shipments in the very near future.

Sweet corn will be short and many kinds total failures, especially in the early varieties. In field corn, flint and dent are of fairly good quality, but the yield is limited on account of only a small part of the state having grown good crops during the past year, this applying particularly to the larger and later named varieties of white and yellow dent, also to flint, due to limited acreage. We believe, however, that the quality will be good and show a high percentage of germinating vitality.

WESTERN SEED & IRRIGATION CO.

Davy Moves to Juvisy.

With the purchase of the establishment of Dupenloup, Pienness & Larigaldie, at Juvisy France, established in 1845, Davy, well-known seedsman, for a number of years at Arpajon, has moved his business to Juvisy, where he has made extensive improvements, including additional warehouses and modern seed-cleaning machinery, making it one of the largest, up-to-date establishments of its kind in France. Seeds are now being grown on the Davy farms at Arpajon and in the west of France.

THE 1918 tomato pack is officially reported about 4,000,000 cases more than last year.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The feature of the monthly meeting of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, November 20, was the lecture of Professor H. D. Phelps on "The Storing of Vegetables," a model of a small storage plant such as may be used in the average home cellar being shown.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, December 3.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $3.50 to $5.00; celery, crate, $1.00 to $1.25; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.75 to $2.50; radishes, per dozen bunches, 35 to 40 cents; tomatoes, per lug, $3.00 to $3.50.

New York December 2.—Celery (state), per bunch, 30 to 60 cents; cucumbers, $1.50 to $3.25 per dozen; mushrooms, $1.00 to $1.85 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 15 to 32 cents; lettuce, per package, 75 cents to $5.00; radishes, per 100 bunches, $3.00.

Beets for Influenza.

An Austrian doctor having discovered that beets were a preventative of and remedy for influenza, gave his patients a plateful of beet salad as soon as the fever set in and within eight hours after they had eaten the beets the fever would leave them—so he asserted. According to a report from The Hague, this alleged cure on becoming known in Holland led to such a demand for beets that the price advanced to 40 cents each, whereas before the war they had cost about two cents.

Vegetable Markets.

While the movement is still decreasing, prices continue steady to strong according to reports received by the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, for the period November 26-December 2. Potatoes averaged about the same as during the previous week, being slightly lower in the west and very firm in the east. Minnesota and Wisconsin No. 1 sacked whites held at $1.60-$1.70 for carlots at Chicago, but weakened slightly in jobbing markets. Northern shipping points were steady. The tone of the onion market improved both east and west. Choice sacked yellow stock advanced to $1.75 f. o. b. Connecticut valley shipping points and ruled $1.50 in the Rochester, N. Y., section. California Browns strengthened to a range of $1.25-$1.50 and eastern and middle-west sacked yellows held at $1.25-$1.75 in most distributing markets. Cabbage values continued to strengthen with sharp gains in producing sections. New York Danish seed advanced fully $4 at Rochester, closing at $18-$22 per ton in bulk. Wisconsin Holland seed was strong in shipping sections and consuming markets advanced to a general range of $20-$27. Chicago advanced $4 to a range of $22-$24. Shipments declined sharply. New York Golden Heart celery strengthened in producing sections, choice field stock ruling $3.25 in the rough f. o. b. Rochester. Michigan celery was unchanged at $1-$1.25 per square at Chicago. California Golden Heart was steady at shipping points at 50-60 cents per dozen. Florida head lettuce ruled $2 per hamper at Orlando and $2.50-$3.50 in consuming markets. California Iceberg was steady at $3.50-$4.50 per crate.

Celery.

This has been a remarkable season for celery, especially so in regard to the market. We cannot remember such a shortage of celery, which of course means high prices, for in this business, cost of production has nothing to do with the selling price; the law of supply and demand rules supreme, and the grower must look out for himself where he comes out. Several factors bear on the present situation, namely, a shortage of labor, dry season, and difficult and expensive transportation. In our section, celery has never been a very important market garden crop, owing to the fact that northern producers flooded this market with cheap celery. But this is not the case now, and as long as conditions remain as they are, it will be wise to pay more attention to this crop. This is especially true since the introduction of hilling machinery has simplified culture wonderfully. We have used two implements for some time that work hand in hand, and which have displaced hand labor entirely, and these two are Planet Jr. pivot wheel two-horse cultivator, and the Bonney banker. With the former exact and speedy cultivation is possible, and the latter machine hills as fast as a team can walk and does it well. We have finished this season one of the finest crops of celery we ever saw without any hand labor whatsoever. Of course, this crop was primarily the result of mechanical watering—for without water, we would have had no celery. But with the withdrawal of our labor for war purposes, we never could have completed the crop without the above two machines or similar ones. In the end, mechanical equipment is more reliable than hired help, and this is now more true than ever. The greatest problem to our celery crop has been the harvest, but owing to cheap production, we could afford to spend more for the harvest and did not hesitate to pay $5 per day for men. Conditions have to be met, and in these notes is our way as practiced this season. We believe many growers could pay more attention to celery with profit. MARKETMAN.

American Association of Nurserymen.

J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., President; J. Edward McCon, Morrisville, Pa., Vice-President; Curtis Nye Smith, 19 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Secretary and Counsel. Forty-fourth annual convention will be held at Chicago in 1919.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—John Ernst has purchased 12 acres of land on the Janesville road on which he will establish a nursery.

Christmas Tree Embargoes.

From present indications, taking into consideration embargoes, quarantines in several sections against cutting and shipping owing to prevalence of pests, and the difficulties of freight transportation, the Christmas tree supply for the coming holidays seems uncertain as shown by the reports of the following well-known dealers:

According to the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, due to the embargo against transportation of evergreens from New England, because of one or two diseases which are spread by the trees when thrown into yards, etc., the firm's source of supply, which from present appearances will be very limited, will be confined to northern Michigan and Wisconsin, while the matter of delay in freights makes the situation even more difficult.

Hall, Wedge & Carter, general commission merchants, Chicago, who for the past four or five years have handled small table Christmas trees in carloads, have abandoned them this season, their action being based upon a communication from the United States railroad administration, received September 23, in reply to a request for information as to whether the small trees would be considered a non-essential product this year, and as to whether in event dealers were allowed to handle them, shipments moving out of Minnesota to Chicago, Atlantic coast points and intermediate destinations would be embargoed. The railroad administration, while stating at that time there was no disposition on its part to take any such action, called attention to the fact that forest products to other than several departments of the government, except shocks, staves, headings and manufactured containers, were under embargo from all parts of the United States and Canada to the points mentioned, and that it would also be necessary for the consignee to obtain a permit covering each shipment.

W. A. Harnis & Co., another prominent Chicago commission firm, who have taken the matter of embargoes up with the forestry divisions of a number of the states in which the bulk of these trees are cut, report that in Maine no new quarantine has been placed on evergreens, the federal restrictions being the only quarantine in force in that state. The New York state laws prohibit the importation of any evergreens from the quarantined area of Maine. In Vermont, there is no law against cutting and shipping such stock, but there is a federal quarantine against the shipping of Christmas trees from certain sections of the state, due to the prevalence of the gypsy or brown-tail moth. New Hampshire has no restrictions placed upon the shipment of evergreens out of the state. The movement of young pine trees has been prohibited on account of the white pine blister rust, but spruce, fir and hemlock are not affected.

Nursery Stock Embargo.

Additional restrictions on the entry into this country of certain classes of nursery stock and other plants and seeds, are urgently needed, according to the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which has just been made public. "The danger of introducing destructive diseases with plants

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurserymen and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

having earth about the roots, and plants and seeds of all kinds for propagation, from little known or little explored countries, is especially great," declares Secretary Houston.

"The large risks from importations of these two classes arise from the impossibility of properly inspecting the former, and from the dangers which can not be foreseen with respect to the latter. Examination of such material is necessarily difficult, and the discovery of infesting insects particularly if hidden in bark or wood, or of evidences of disease is largely a matter of chance. Such control therefore, as a condition of entry is a very imperfect safeguard."

A wide interest in this subject has developed throughout the country, according to the secretary, which has manifested itself in numerous requests from official bodies in all sections for greater restriction on plant imports. As a result of a hearing held last May, at which the whole subject was fully discussed, it is proposed to issue a quarantine which shall restrict the entry of foreign plants and seeds for propagation substantially to field, vegetable and flower seeds, certain bulbs, rose stocks and fruit stocks, cuttings and scions. The entry of these classes of plants is represented to be essential to the floriculture and horticulture of this country.

BUSINESS NOT UP TO FORMER YEARS.

With favorable weather during the past week, especially on Wednesday and Thanksgiving day the local trade had the opportunity to handle a large supply of stock, and while results were in the main satisfactory, sales fell below those of former years. Chrysanthemums as usual led the demand but the warm weather during the greater part of the month made the stock soft and hard to keep. Carnations were good but scarce. Roses, while plentiful, were never in great demand. Other stock was limited in supply. The supply of plants was short and prospects for Christmas are none too promising. November was a fairly busy month, but society events and weddings do not call for many flowers at present.

NOTES.

All of the flower shops are brightening up and making their establishments attractive for the coming holiday rush. Several of the department stores have decorated with laurel and holly to encourage early shopping. The florists, however, will not get the benefit of this suggestion, as their orders come in last with the necessity of delivery on short notice.

S. A. Anderson is a busy man these days, arranging for the opening of his Elmwood avenue store and getting ready to assume his new office of county treasurer.

BRISK SALES AT HIGH PRICES.

Thanksgiving trade in this city was excellent despite the high prices that prevailed for cut flowers, a considerable increase over the figures of last year. In chrysanthemums, the very poorest brought $3 per dozen, while the carnations sold at $2. All roses were in good demand and brought excellent returns. Pompons proved very popular and large numbers of them were disposed of. Violets did not meet with a heavy call. Corsages of roses were the favorites. For table decoration, begonias, cyclamens, primroses, pompons and fern dishes went well. Christmas novelties are now beginning to arrive and advance orders are being booked.

NOTES.

George Kramer is taking the place of George Pringle at Salter Bros.' Main street store, the latter having gone to Florida for the winter because of ill health.

Word has been received from Charles Gow, now with the Canadian Mounted Rifles in France, that he will soon visit this city, bringing with him an English bride.

Sergeant Lester Brown, formerly with H. E. Wilson, is reported in a hospital in France, having been gassed and wounded by shrapnel.

CHESTER.

BRISTOL, TENN.—The Thanksgiving trade at the Fairmount Gardens was about as good as usual, with an adequate supply of flowers of fine quality.

SAC CITY, IA.—Willard H. Montgomery of the Montgomery Gardens, reports business was never better than at present, the demand exceeding the supply. Upon the return of Homer L. Montgomery, now with the 12th Machine Gun Battalion in France, extensive improvements will be made to the present range.

THANKSGIVING TRADE DISAPPOINTMENT.

Trade during the past week was very good, but the Thanksgiving demand was not up to the average. Stock sold fairly well and at satisfactory prices, but the demand was far below the actual supply. Carnations, violets, roses, pompons and orchids were popular items, but the great call was for chrysanthemums, all of which moved well. Pot pompons were good sellers and the same was true of ferns and small palms. The stores are now started for the Christmas trade and from all indications there will be a good demand, but there is a possibility of a shortage of stock. The majority of the greenhouse establishments have closed with the end of the chrysanthemum season and those that are open will be kept busy all winter.

H. A. T.

Patterson, N. J.

The majority of the local retailers agree that the Thanksgiving business was much better than last year. At the stores of Edward Seery, it was stated that they had a great Thanksgiving business, and that their everyday trade was good. In the show window of his Broadway store, there is a large Liberty wreath of magnolia and cypress, with a white dove perched thereon, the national colors being prominent in the arrangement.

Arthur I. Vescelius stated that his Thanksgiving business was 30 per cent better than last year.

Bells Across the Snow.

O Christmas, merry Christmas;
Is it really come again,
With its memories and greetings,
With its joy and with its pain?
There's a minor in the carol,
And a shadow in the light,
And a spray of cypress twining
With the holly wreath to-night.
And the hush is never broken
By laughter, light and low,
As we listen in the starlight,
To the "bells across the snow."

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS.

The Mid-Winter Harvest.

The brightest, cheeriest holiday of the year is the glorious gift-giving Christmas time, when the thought of making others happy is uppermost in the minds of all. To the florist it is the culmination of one of his busiest seasons. As the farmer harvests his crops in the fall, so, also, do the growers of plants and flowers, who after months of careful preparation, look to the Christmas market for their reward. The handicaps under which, the past season, growers have had to labor, lack of coal, competent help and greatly increased expenses, owing to war conditions, have curtailed the output considerably. Stock in many lines is scarce, and the prospects are that those who have been able to surmount their difficulties, will be in a position to command prices for their products that will amply repay their energy and confidence in the future. Wide-awake retailers everywhere are making great preparations for a business, which, judging by the advance orders and inquiries received, will be quite the equal of any that has gone before. Supply houses, first to feel the increasing enervancy of the retail stores, have had a splendid advance business for all classes of Christmas goods in every section of the country. Commission houses and wholesale cut flower dealers in all the large cities are unanimous in their opinion that all available stock will be disposed of at prices ranging considerably higher than those of last season.

Much is expected of the retail stores, as the final disposition of the stock is in their hands. That they will be equal to the occasion, there is no doubt, although they have also been hard hit in the loss of competent help and the greatly increased overhead expenses on account of war conditions. Young women have taken the place of men and proved very efficient in much of the work of the store. They have very likely won a position in the business that is pretty sure to continue. Those of the trade who keep a good lookout ahead and have made the best use of the dull periods, although the past two months have shown but little leisure, are fairly well stocked with all kinds of made-up work, such as Christmas wreaths for the window and also for the cemetery, which latter this season, on account of the many recent deaths, will, no doubt, be in big demand.

Too much stress cannot be laid on preparedness. "Always ready" is the watchword of the successful man. Charles Thorley, of New York, once said that any success he had enjoyed came to him because of his always looking ahead and being ready and prepared for every business opportunity as it came along. Henry Penn, of Boston, believes in first being abreast of the times or a little ahead, and then pressing this fact home to the people through newspaper space.

Store Arrangement at Holiday Time.

The arrangement and setting of the store at this busy time is most important. Many shops in the downtown section are crowded with the ordinary daily business, and at holiday times have to make a most intensive use of every foot of space. Some handle only certain lines, while others try to manage by carrying and taking orders from samples, having their stock in a nearby store, from which orders are filled and delivered.

A greenhouse in the rear is always a great help where plants can be stored closely together and moved out as there is room.

Temporary set stages against blank walls, or in front of cases, provide considerable extra room for the display of plants. It helps considerably if all plants of a kind are kept together. Blocks of color are much more effective than when indiscriminately mixed. A group of oranges or ardisias will attract more attention than single plants. Several of each may be featured with some form of decorations and stood above the others.

A little decoration of the interior with ground pine wreathing and a few stock wreaths of red chenille, hung well up out of the way, is a good setting. Wreaths for cemetery and house decoration can be displayed on wall space or in front of cases.

Temporary shelving over counters, well up above the headline, is a great help, particularly for placing, at rush hours, goods that are sold. Cellar or basement space is valuable, and should be cleared of everything that can be temporarily stored elsewhere. An empty store near by, in which can be carried the stock and Christmas greens, holly, laurel, etc., which is best kept cold, is a great asset. Holly and mistletoe should be kept in boxes open to view, but not handled any more than can be helped. Mistletoe, if in loose sprays, should be bunched and priced, as to allow selection of sprays soon makes junk of the whole lot.

To keep the stock in order, it should be in charge of some one who will replace the unsold goods shown to customers and rearrange broken lots or groups. Frequently, buyers seeing a few empty spaces, will say, "I am too late; your best has been picked out." Filling in with new, or spreading out to make the best showing, leaves no excuse for this thought. If someone, however, is not delegated to look after this work, it is not done, and the store soon has an untidy appearance that affects sales.

Christmas Plant Baskets.

One of the most popular sellers for the holidays is the basket filled with foliage and flowering plants. The supply houses carry a large assortment of these in all shades of single or two-toned colors, also in gilt or silver, which, when artistically filled and decorated with ribbons, are features of any Christmas stock.

There are certain lines of plants that are best suited for the purpose. In foliage, there are crotons in from three to four-inch pots and a few larger, Dracenas terminalis, Massangeana and Kelleriana, four-inch Pandanus Veitchii, four-inch arecas, Kentias, three-inch to four-inch pot cocos, Smithii, Norwood and elegantissima in small sizes, also the Glory and adiantum ferns. Other nephrolepis are too coarse. Polypodium aureum is good for large baskets. The birds nest fern from two and a half up to fours is very useful for this work.

While a combination of these plants is good, it takes the addition of the flowering, berried or fruited stock, to make the real effective, salable on sight, basket. Heather in from three to six-inch pots, poinsettias and cyclamens are first selection. Begonias are beautiful, but do not hold up. Celestial and birds-eye peppers add color, while Otaheite oranges and ardisias give variety to the expensive arrangements.

Whenever possible, the filling of these baskets should be done at the greenhouses a week or 10 days previous to the time they are wanted. The stock may be gathered from a dozen places, but when all together a number can be filled in a short time, and if well cared for, will get over the moving, straighten out and improve, and can be sent to the store as wanted. This greatly relieves the slavish night work that is required when they are filled in the store as the trade develops.

Care should be taken in color arrangements. White cyclamens and heather look well with poinsettias, while baskets of all poinsettias are very striking. Pink or red cyclamens and heather are a good combination, all, of course, to be used in connection with selections of the various foliage plants. Roman hyacinths work in well, adding grace and fragrance.

Pans and Hampers.

Poinsettia pans are always popular. Many growers make these up, when the plants are young, in from 8 to 12-inch pans. The best are made up about a week before with strong three-inch stock, the edges of the pans bordered with adiantum from three-inch pots. These ferns, if bushy, can be divided by cutting the ball in half with a knife from the bottom up to near the top. In this way the roots are not torn apart, those that are cut do not seem to affect the foliage and two plants can be made from one.

Four-inch cyclamens with adiantum, in low pans or baskets, the latter with loop handles on the sides, can be made choice and showy. It is the color combinations and wealth of bloom that makes these arrangements attractive. Sprigs of holly or evergreens with cones at the ribbon bows, make an effective finish. All these basket receptacles are fitted with tins so that they can be kept watered without danger of drip in the house. The flowering stock in all handle baskets should be placed to face one way, foliage plants or ferns filling in the other side. Bird, or butterfly or figure sticks may be added with good effect.

There are many baskets which are but pot covers, with high handles for decorative ribbon effects. One choice plant in from a six to eight-inch pot, such as a madeup poinsettia, heather or choice cyclamen, is placed in these and makes at once a plant basket. Hamper baskets are also filled the same as those with handles. The lid, nearly fully raised at the back, furnishes a good place for a ribbon bow and streamer.

The show window filled with an assortment of these baskets on pedestals draped with velvet, each standing so as to show its individuality, with a few choice ferns in between, will be a good drawing card the week before the rush.

Wreaths.

Wreaths come into their own at the holiday season. No house decoration is complete without the holly, evergreen or red immortelle wreath, or imitation of the same as is now so effectively made with the Japanese chenille. The holly wreath is one of the most popular, its glossy, dark green leaves and bright red berries, combining the Christmas colors, make it the ideal decoration for the window. As a rule, the "fancy" or highest grade wreaths contain two kinds of holly, as it is seldom that the branches bearing the rich, dark green, glossy leaves are heavily berried, for the reason that they grow in low, moist, partially shaded places, while the berries set heavily on trees on higher ground out in the open, in which case the foliage is smaller and a yellowish green in color. Some trees which set heavily with berries have very poor leaves. These branches are gathered and the leaves clipped, leaving only the berries, which are used almost entirely to give color to the wreaths made of the low-land holly, thus making a rich looking combination that is perfect in every respect. The stock, or commercial standard wreath, is wired or wrapped with string on a wire or twisted ring of wild grape vine, willow or other pliable branch. The green, shady holly has broad leaves, which are not so curly as that of the open ground. These make a broad flat wreath to which are added, as the wreath is tied, the berries in bunches, from four to six to a wreath, according to size. The fancy, or high grade wreath, is wrapped on a ring or frame in the same way, but is full rounded in form with the clipped berried branches interspersed throughout the foliage instead of at intervals.

CHRISTMAS WREATH.

Boxwood, Cones, Holly and Red Ribbon.

Holly crosses are made the same as the wreaths, generally tied on a frame made of laths. These are used entirely for the cemetery. Some are quite elaborate, made on wire frames with heavy bases to stand upright.

Good full lycopodium wreaths, when made of selected dark green, fluffy stock, have a rich appearance. A slender wrapped ring of red chenille set in or laid over the surface of the green in the center, adds a distinct line of color. A red star of immortelles can be used to fill up the open center. Tied with a generous red ribbon, these are at once attractive and salable. Good sized pompons of red immortelles, set in at intervals, is another method of adding the much desired color.

The fancy evergreen wreath is one of the most artistic. Made of clippings from the nursery rows, there is a variety of form and color that admits of great variation in arrangement. Combined with cones and well-berried sprays of holly, red and white ruscus and other like material, and finished with a red or two-toned red and green ribbon, they are the choice of the shop. The boxwood is also a favorite. A well-made crescent boxwood, decorated with holly berries and cones, which latter should have a little backing of spruce or pine, is a sure seller.

For the cemetery, there is nothing better than the bronze magnolia, which prepared months before, is now decorated with holly berries, cones, red and white ruscus, statice, light sprays of retinospora, hemlock or pine, red immortelles, helichrysums, etc. Fresh green magnolia leaves are preferred by those customers who abhor anything of an artificial nature. These, decorated with fresh flowers, are very good looking and profitable as well.

The red chenille wreath, with the addition on one side of a few sprays of boxwood, red and white ruscus cones, a little holly and a splashing red bow, is a quantity product that makes a good money getter in many shops. A narrow wreath of red chenille or red immortelles, through which is drawn a well-berried and bushy spray of holly, and held together with a ribbon bow, is pretty as a wreath for a window or to send as a Christmas card. The miniature wreaths used for auto car decoration are popular, and will be found good stock to carry.

CHRISTMAS BASKET.

Boxwood, Cones, Holly and Ribbon.

Wreaths of all laurel, full and generous in their makeup, are, with a bow of ribbon, complete without further additions. Wreaths of hardy ivy are also in demand for the cemetery. These are generally made on mossed frames. Many prefer mossed frames for their boxwood and evergreen wreaths as they claim to get a better effect and a more economical use of material than when tied on. Green and bronze galax are also much used, but as they cannot be prepared much in advance, take up valuable time in the rush hours and should be kept in the background at this busy time.

Evergreen Baskets.

There is nothing more profitable than the small basket of evergreens mixed with other decorative material, such as red and white ruscus, sprays of holly, cones, statice, etc. Ordinary tumblers or low vase baskets are used.

These are mossed and the material stuck in. When tied with a red bow, they are suitable to send as Christmas cards or small gifts. They take but a handful of material, but a minute to arrange, and easily sell for from $1.00 to $1.50. A lot of old basket stock that is a bit passe, can be gilded and when filled, looks as good as the new.

Large sized baskets, filled with longer fancy cut evergreen sprays, cones, red and white ruscus, holly sprays, etc., and a ribboned handle, will be found very striking and salable. Showy well made baskets of these materials will bring as much as growing plant baskets of the same size that cost twice as much or more to prepare. Supply houses carry quite a line of burrs, thistles, cones, etc., in all colors, on long stems, which are especially suited to set off the sombre shades of the evergreens.

Taking the Orders.

There are a number of methods in the taking or writing down of orders. Many stores believe they have the best; to them it is almost perfect, yet while efficient no two of these systems are alike. The small store, or one man business, for the most part, still uses a book in which all orders are written down in rotation as they are received, placing on the margin the day and hour when delivery is to be made. At busy or holiday times, the week is generally dated ahead, one or more pages given to a day as seems necessary. Orders here are always on record, but they sometimes are overlooked, placed on the wrong day, or do not get out on time, by being sandwiched in among a lot of others.

Duplicating slip machines, which make three records at once, one of which is given to the customer or sent with the goods, one turned in to the office, while the third remains in the machine as a closed record of the day's business, are very satisfactory. A good system is to turn in all orders, as received, to the office, where the bookkeeper or cashier takes entire charge of preparing them for the store files. All mistakes of improperly carried out items, whether charge or paid, time of delivery, initials of name, address, etc., that are so common in hastily written orders, are corrected at once when easily remembered. The order is then copied on a small slip about the size of an address tag, the day, date, and time of delivery being on the top line, with the item or items below. The card, if any, is placed in a tag envelope, on which is printed, "This envelope contains card to go with"—plant, design, bouquet or whatever the order calls for is written on dotted lines below. A delivery tag is then addressed, and the card envelope and the slip containing the order, are all three fastened together with a wire stationary clip, the order slip on top. The order is then placed in one of a rack of seven boxes, or a partitioned long box, each plainly marked with a day of the week and one for the future.

This detail work is done much better by the office clerk than by the salespeople, who need every moment to wait on customers. The original order sheets are then filed to be charged later. The work of filling orders progresses rapidly under this system, as the one or more items are on the slip, with which, when packed or selected is placed the card (if any), and the tag is at hand to be tied when the box or package is wrapped. The order slip is initialed and filed by the clerk putting up the order.

The selection of cut flowers for December 24-25 should be made by one or two competent persons. After the supper hour, space in the store is cleared, and the cut flowers in the boxes are brought up. These should never be disturbed or taken out until the orders are to be filled. When received, if properly sprinkled and kept in a cool place, they will remain firm and fresh. As selections are made the flowers with the tag and card are given to others, who pack them in boxes, which have been lined with wax paper, pinning the tag to the box, when filled, which is then passed on to the wrappers. This all may seem a little complicated, but it is a system which greatly simplifies the work when it gets going. Orders that call for plants are given in charge of others, who select, or attach to plants previously set aside, when sold. The great advantage of this system is that everything is at hand to immediately finish the order once it is taken up. When the file boxes are empty, the work is finished, and nothing has been overlooked.

The Telephone.

At this busy time, with the store full of customers, many of them in a hurry, and who have waited some time for the proprietor or their favorite clerk, there is a call over the phone, in fact, incessant calls all day long from customers, who in the quiet of their homes, do not see why Mr. Brown cannot come for "just a minute," and if he does excuse himself to get to them, holds him for five or more.

Everybody recognizes that the telephone is a very important factor in the business. In many stores one-half the orders are received over the phone. Customers expect the same treatment over the wire that they would receive in the store. All phone calls should be answered by the cashier or one of the office force who is familiar with the customers and competent to take orders. They then call the person wanted or take the message or order, which is to be at once given to the person desired for attention. This keeps the service in active operation, which means so much, and is so necessary at this busy time. Many occasional buyers who have no account, and others who call for the first time, will give orders over the phone. In all such cases, when the order is taken, the clerk should say, "How shall we send this, C. O. D., or will you send us a check?" If responsible, the answer is always satisfactory; if not, a poor account is avoided.

Prices for the Holidays.

There should be no difficulty in getting prices that show a good profit at the coming holidays. The early shopping in all the large department stores has set in with a vigor that promises a volume of business likely to break all records. Prices, in many cases, are much higher than those of even a year ago, and yet this does not appear to make any difference, the stores being crowded as never before.

The way to get a good price is to ask it. At this time, people expect to pay more. Many judge articles by the price; a thing that costs more than something that looks just as good, must, of course, be better.

Many storekeepers judge others, in their ability to pay, by themselves, and price their goods as low as possible, so as not to get the name of being dear or running a high priced store. As a matter of fact, if goods are of number one quality, they will easily bring the top price and draw a clientele of customers that appreciate such stock.

Buying articles for $1, and selling them at $2, is the rule in many shops; the immediate transaction looks big, but when balanced in the scale of final adjustment, the net profit is infinitesimal. At all holiday seasons, from 150 to 200 per cent gross profit should be the rule on all perishables, which will include such stock, that not sold has to be carried over until next year.

The art in the fancy wreath or plant basket is worth as much, or more, than the cost of the materials, and should be included in the price. Novelty in design, material or arrangement should be a factor, and the price in keeping with the effect produced. Wreaths of Florida moss, tied up with bows of red ribbon, were a Christmas novelty that last season sold readily at $10. The material, aside from the ribbon, did not cost 50 cents, yet the effect produced, together with the novelty and the price, put them in a class with others that cost much more but were priced the same.

Many plants can have a featuring touch of color; a ribbon bow, a band of the same about the crepe pot cover, a bird or butterfly stick in the pot, or if placed in a wicker cover or jardiniere, it shows to better advantage, the price can be advanced very much above the cost of the additions.

The expense of conducting a holiday business with all the necessary extras, labor, car hire, deliveries, suppers, goods left over, waste, etc., which in ratio are much greater than in the ordinary every day trade, must be provided for in higher prices on goods sold. The coming holiday stocks will cost at least 20 per cent above those of last year. All operating expenses will almost bear the same ratio of increase, so that the retailer who does not exact and receive considerably higher prices, will have little left to compensate him for his hard labor.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

The rapidly approaching holiday finds all the shops working overtime getting their stocks in order for the grand rush. Galax leaves may now be wired or stemmed up and packed in boxes in a cool place for instant use when needed, or made into wreaths and crosses of this material away from drafts, will keep in good condition.

Magnolia wreaths made up during the summer, may now be brought out and decorated with holly, cones, evergreen, red and white ruscus, etc., making them suitable for cemetery decoration. Artificial crepe and waxed flowers will be used not a little this year to help out the scarcity that is likely to prevail in the fresh stock.

Natural grasses and helichrysum flowers make a very good decoration in the magnolia wreath. Years ago, wreaths and crosses of this material alone were very popular for the cemetery.

All indications point to a good Christmas business and a shortage in all lines of stock, particularly flowering plants and cut flowers.

Every effort should be made to make the most of what is available. Single specimen plants may be featured in baskets just large enough to fit the pot. A ribbon on the handle gives a finishing touch.

The plant baskets of foliage and flowering plants, if not already finished, should be filled at once with the stock previously selected and set aside, the work done at the greenhouses, where with a few days to recover, they will make a much better showing than when the filling is done in hurried night work of the last few days in the store.

Give the outside front of the store an elaborate and showy finish. A six-inch wide, half-inch board tied heavily with hemlock, will make a heavy band, 18 inches in width, which placed either side of the front and over the cornice, will make a pretty green frame. Dot this with bunches of red immortelles or pompons and the same size of red chenille about a foot apart, which will add the needed color. Festoons of ground pine or laurel wreathing will make an artistic finish. Many stores in other lines put a Christmas touch to their fronts with a more or less elaborate use of such material, but the florist should excel by all means in this respect, making such a display as is sure to call attention to his establishment.

Do not be afraid to ask good prices. Everything is costing more this year. The overhead will be much higher, and about all the traffic will bear, will be necessary if one is to come out ahead.

In the arrangement of the store, goods of a kind should, as far as possible, be kept or displayed together. A group of poinsettia pots and pans, or of ferns, will attract more attention than separately distributed through the whole stock.

"Gifts that will grow," is a good slogan for the advertising and also window card.

The Late Mrs. Sage.

The mile of rhododendrons given by Mrs. Sage for the adornment of Central Park revealed her in a characteristic attitude toward a favorite object of her interest. The impulse behind the gift was peculiarly appropriate; the park received much attention from Mrs. Sage, and her thought was to increase its attractiveness for the millions to whom its beauties are an inspiration and a treat. The discouraging fact that among those millions were not a few so selfish as deliberately to destroy, in so far as they could, this child of her fancy, has often aroused comment. Thus all of us suffer because of the misdeeds of a few, tolerated by our laziness in not punishing the wrongdoers.

Mrs. Sage never got over being a schoolmistress. She remained to the last a splendid type of that fine womanhood that has given and is giving so much to America through the channels of education, public and private. Her talks to school children were based on good sense informed by wide experience and illuminated by a penetrating intellect. Where can be found better advice for boys and girls, men and women, the obscure and the powerful, than this?

"I commend to you from my experience of life the cultivation of manners and sound common sense. Character is a perfectly educated will."

Mrs. Sage possessed character.—New York Sun.

Hail Insurance.

Mutual insurance is either an effort on the part of the insured to secure cheaper insurance than that furnished by capitalized companies, or a mutual endeavor to carry risks refused by old line companies. To make mutual companies safe, reserve funds are absolutely necessary. There are various ways of securing legitimate reserves which go to make mutuals as safe as the companies with a capitalization, the only difference being that the backing is furnished mutually by mutual companies. Mutual insurance, without a reserve fund, is largely a matter of faith upon the part of the assured, and a mutual insurance organization that does not levy an advanced assessment, and does not have a reserve, is a matter of supreme confidence in wind.

It takes cold cash to buy dry goods and groceries, and it takes the same commodity to liquidate losses, but if the assured has to depend upon mutuals to liquidate a loss after it has occurred, the cold cash is often evanescent, and the holder of the insurance is sometimes stung. The honesty of the management counts largely, of course, but no matter how honest it may be, the ability to pay and the plan of collecting premiums is something that should be gone into carefully.

The larger the coverage, and the more extensive the contract, the larger should be the reserve. The commissioner of banking and insurance of the state in which companies are organized, can give valuable information concerning the standing of mutuals. Any effort to secure insurance for less than actual cost, will inevitably lead to dissatisfaction on the part of the assured.

Florist Business in Wartime.

Paper by J. Otto Thilow read at the December meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia.

The florist business in wartime, whether active or dull, would be no guide for future planning or preparation of what to do in times of peace, unless the strain is felt through loss, or buoyancy enhanced through victory. Wars are not frequent, and are not always under the same commercial relationship.

During the period of the Civil War, 1861-65, I was through circumstances located in the most strained quarters of the southern states, viz., Richmond, Va. During that period, (of which I have only a very faint recollection), the florist of those days knew very little of forcing houses, or the production of flowers in any quantity, save the once famous Camellia japonica and Stevia serrata, all grown in pots.

As the period of conflict continued for four years, and under extreme strained conditions, perhaps somewhat known to some of my hearers, the florist was very much in obscurity. Decorations were confined to the social events among the then wealthy, and funeral work a necessity, although limited. As the years went on to the ending of the conflict and a vanquished south, thoughts were not directed to a speedy return to prosperity. But in the course of a half decade, reconstruction and rebuilding awakened the people from their despondent lethargy, partly forced by markets opening for the southern products, cotton and tobacco. During this period, in the city mentioned, then perhaps 50,000 inhabitants (now about 150,000), there was but one florist of any consequence, John Morton, closely related to our well known veteran, Peter Henderson.

His establishment comprised perhaps 12,000 feet of glass, under which were raised the usual pot plants for bedding and for spring sales only, and a very little for winter decoration, except a limited stock of pot specimens. The florist business was very inactive, but with the trend of commercial growth and the remaking of the whole south, the boom was as much delegated to the florist as in other commercial lines. The steady growth, with new methods, modern houses and equipment, placed this city in the forefront of the business in the south. In 1910, the records give us, among 12 establishments, 700,000 feet of glass area, and a corresponding high grade of trade, which today demands more material than they can produce. Thus we see the influence during the war among a people to whom the outcome was not hopeful, and among whom the depression lasted a long time. I must say, however, that as soon as the florist found that his business was a factor, he began to advertise. Even today, it is a common sight, when riding through the adjacent surroundings, to find large billboards advertising some live florist. This was before the advent of the slogan "Say it with Flowers."

We cannot compare localities without seeing a great difference. During the Spanish-American war, the business within the borders of the United States remained as active as at other times. The scene of action was in Cuba and the Philippines, and other remote islands. The only pressure brought upon us was a light form of taxation, and not enough of our man power exacted from our population to make a perceptible difference; being also of short duration, the effect was not marked. Therefore, we cannot draw any comparison, as the business, unhampered as it was, made its usual stride in both construction and expansion.

We have had a number of problems confront us during the war just closed, we hope, and the effects of which are still seriously under pressure, as we have been told that our vocation was not at all in the line of importance. Imagine an industry which has assumed the proportion of our florist business in this land of ours. The area covered with glass, that of growing in open ground, the constant need of glass, heating appliances, fuel, etc.

J. Otto Thilow, Philadelphia, Pa.

The approximate estimate in 1910, when the greatest increase of importance was compiled, then the acreage had increased from 9,307 to 18,248 in 10 years; the total valuation being $35,000,000, an increase of 86 per cent.

The bulk of this increase centered around the large cities of the east, and in the states of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, and they alone made up $12,000,000 of the aggregate. The most rapid increase has been in the Pacific section, which in latter years has shown marvelous activity in floriculture. We see from these figures that the florist business assumes great responsibility in the financial world, and in property ownership. All of this means the development of an industry, because the people demand it, essential or non-essential; and not because it has been developed by the florist himself and his advertising skill; he is very poor at that, and not until the facilities have warranted our production, have we resorted to "Say it with Flowers." It is also apparent that the largest florist industries and their location, indicate thickest population. It is a business which must be near its consuming centers, although shipping facilities have altered conditions in favor against high priced properties for location.

But what have these statements to do with florist business in wartime? A large enterprise needs constant care and attention of the closest surveillance; this also applies to those of limited proportions. In preparation for the future season as in no other line of commerce, the whole operation is under one's own personal supervision. But when this is all interrupted by government restriction, such as we have experienced in the past 18 months, viz., the working force withdrawn for military, the limited coal supply, almost prohibitive prices of glass, iron, lumber, and even flower pots, then a pallor of fear spread over the country to an almost straining point, even to a proposed closing down of many who feared the worst. With this menace prevalent throughout the country, there was an unprecedented demand for flowers, almost altogether on account of the prevailing epidemic which came upon us with appalling results. For such needs, flowers will and must be used. Many were glad even for this excuse to go into the flower shop uncriticized, otherwise it would be considered luxury as against the needs of the Red Cross and other benevolence to alleviate the sufferings of war. The strain occasioned by the war has had an 18 months' duration, but strenuous during that period.

While the labor situation is by no means settled, nor would any florist of good judgment insist on his full supply of fuel, as he has already prepared for the conditions, (and changes cannot be made instantly), while there is less than 50 per cent of efficient labor obtainable, the florist, like the householder, or other lines of business, has learned many points of efficiency in curtailing. Some of these were thought impossible until tried. Expansion was unthought of, except repairs which were necessary. Economy at all points, in the household, and even to clothing for the person. What has he profited under these extreme conditions?

We venture a prophecy. Economy will redound to great gain when the usual activity begins. The florist has learned to take into account many items and methods of operation never tried before, (one of the greatest assets). Knowing the value of material, he will construct only to the extent that high labor costs and his own working ability will permit, and will be better able to cope with the periods of business slumps which come without war. They are called financial crises; indeed some wisacres have already prophesied, and they may be thoughtlessly correct, and in this, the whole community suffers. The florist feels it first.

Cost of production is seldom figured accurately. It would be difficult to estimate the cost of producing 1,000 or 10,000 roses for market at a temperature of 40, as against that of 20, over a period of one month. Experience during this strained period may lead one to be more accurate than ever, for such a problem. A large supply of first class stock with active market at good prices, is the zenith of profit; the same supply of same stock during a glut cuts down the profit of the high priced market.

Have the strain and the requirements of curtailing voluntarily and by government demands taught us the lesson by which we can profit? I am of the opinion that the majority of florists have noted many points in their operation, never resorted to before in their whole business career, which will ultimately be a source of saving and profit.

The awakening of a consuming public, after a period of depression, when all energy and time have been directed to war needs, will demand greater intensity, as the florist business is fostered by the liberal patronage of the public, comprised of the leaders in benevolence and patriotism. This we have experienced. They have not thrown aside their interest in floriculture. They will again turn to their surroundings, and work among and talk to their garden pets, also adorn the home with the rose and what not. Even those who have suffered losses, will not harbor their sadness except with a sorrowing pride, but they will not forget nature's product; it is food for the soul. The liberal patronage upon the return of order out of chaos, will benefit the florist as much and more than to many other lines.

The grower who depends on his glass and heat is not alone in this disturbance. The nurseryman alike feels the loss of trade severely. If he has been importing, whether outside stock or stock for under glass, he has been restricted likewise. Operations have been latent. But the same spirit that dominates the home interior and all social functions, is also a factor for the home environment. The grounds of the established estate, new operations for new homes, all will need the attention of the horticulturist, and so the awakening comes to all alike.

We count the past two years with losses and a great strain upon our vitality, not only the war and its circumstances, but we have gone through the sorrow of a plague which has reaped its victims, even greater than the war casualties, and even now the prospects are not altogether promising, but we must look beyond the sea, reflect a moment upon the losses among our horticultural brethren, who have seen their establishments shattered by shot and shell, their all, even to their immediate families, torn and vanishing. What must be their hope and prospect? The interdependence of man so clearly manifests itself from this conflict, such as the world never saw or dreamed of.

But, my friends, remember we have given much in this struggle, and from a great sacrifice must come great good. In the war of the south, the reconstruction lasted many years, because their struggle failed, but in the recent war of the world, and now hopefully finished, our land is yielding in greater abundance every muscle of those who labor, and with added thousands who knew not what labor meant, are now enjoying the bit they can do to encourage mother earth to double her yield, and many also taking the places among machinery and industrial lines, to produce what man power did before entering into service, is going to awaken the prosperity of this land, not menaced by the encroachment of the enemy. With new vigor and determined spirit to meet the new era and dawn of prosperity, do not forget that peace has come to all, and victory to us.

THE VIOLET.

Violets at Rhinebeck.

The few days of unseasonable, warm weather about November 1, blasted all of the young buds as they started from the plants, and the result was felt Thanksgiving week, and will be for the next fortnight. Violets cannot stand a high temperature. Three years ago, in September, a hot spell destroyed the buds and there were no flowers during October, which is the first month of the shipping season.

A peculiar feature about the results of a high temperature is that it does not seriously affect the buds that have started on their way to maturity; it hurries them along and forces them out all at once, but the smaller buds are invariably affected by the heat, hence the serious results are not felt for from three to six weeks following the high temperature. The same condition has also resulted when a boiler shed has been destroyed by fire, causing the boiler to heat extremely and running the temperature in the house up to a high degree. The blooms that have developed, or partly developed, will be as good as if nothing had happened, but after the first two pickings there will be nothing but blasted flowers for six weeks' time, this period being required for the new buds to form and develop into flowers.

This unfortunate circumstance is a severe hardship to the growers in that they have only six or seven months in the year in which there is any income. The rest of the time is taken up with hard work changing the soil and growing new plants until October, when the picking commences if conditions are normal.

All of the growers of former years in the vicinity of Rhinebeck, who were mechanics or had other business experience, have given up violet growing entirely, as with the advanced cost of everything required, they found it more profitable to be employed by Uncle Sam or others. The business now seems to be settling down to just a few successful growers and there is no such thing as an oversupply possible at this time. It is more a question how they are going to supply the demand.

It is very plain to see that the violet is coming back to its own as when George Saltford, the pioneer grower of Rhinebeck, sold his production for the season at $5 per 100 and bought that of the next largest grower, Stanton Rockefeller, at $3 per 100 delivered. Those were happy days for the few, but then Tom, Dick and Harry, the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker, had a dream, caught the scent, and all put up violet houses—and more houses—until a condition developed where there was profit for none. Finally the reaction came. Now the houses have been torn down, wrecked by the accumulation of snow, dismantled, vacated, etc., until as before stated, it is only a question of marketing the product of a few successful growers. With the present price of coal, fertilizer, water, paper—everything double and treble in price—they cannot exist and pay their bills at anything like the returns they used to get.

H. W.

Violet Mrs. David Lloyd George.

The beautiful new violet, named Mrs. David Lloyd George, received the R. H. S. Award of Merit, October 8, when exhibited by the raiser, J. J. Kettle. The petals are deep violet-purple with a few darker markings at their base. In the center are four white petaloid stamens, forming a light-colored "eye" and a few violet lines appear on each of them. The fragrance of the blooms is very pronounced, and this quality, together with rich coloring and long, sturdy stems, marks the variety as one of the finest of recent new violets.—London Gardeners' Chronicle.

Dahlia Winterling.

Many of the handsomest of the new dahlias are quite hard to keep through the winter. They often spoil when kept under exactly the same conditions as the old-fashioned show dahlias which have gone through a succession of winters without loss. It is not advisable for anyone to invest heavily in dahlias of the newer varieties until a test of their keeping qualities has been made. There are some sorts which even commercial growers have difficulty in wintering.

There seems to be an opinion that the best flowers are obtained when the clumps of roots are planted. This is a mistake; it is very much wiser to divide the clumps and to do it early in the spring. It is not advisable to divide them in the fall or during the winter months as is sometimes done. The dahlias will keep during the winter much better in clump form. In the spring, these clumps usually begin to send out sprouts, especially if the cellar is a little damp. Then it becomes an easy matter to cut them up in such a way as to have an eye on every piece. Of course, a tuber will not grow unless a part of the neck containing an eye is attached. If the dahlias do not start sprouting naturally it may be a good plan to put them in a box of moss, or to place a newspaper over them and keep the paper moist, so that the eyes will begin to develop.

The clumps can be divided easily by the use of a sharp knife. First divide the clumps in halves and then cut away the individual tubers. If you have to divide the clumps before the sprouts start, be sure that a good sized portion of the crown or stalk is left on every bulb.—The Rural New Yorker.

PLANT NOTES.

Begonia Rex.

With the advent of steady firing and a warm propagating bench the cuttings of Begonia Rex should be started at once if good plants are desired for spring and summer growing. These plants are very ornamental when well grown and the leaves can be used in much floral work. These plants are raised from either shoot or leaf-cuttings, but where many are propagated the latter method is generally employed. Well matured leaves that are healthy and vigorous are selected and two methods can be adopted. The leaf can be cut several times through the mid-rib and its branches and then

They Lie in France Where Lilies Bloom.

They lie in France
Where lilies bloom;
Those flowers pale
That guard each tomb
Are sadly souls
That smiling stand Close by them in
That martyred land.

And mutely there the long night shadows creep
From quiet hills to mourn for them who sleep,
While o'er them through the dusk go silently
The grieving clouds that slowly drift to sea,
And lately round them moaned the Winter wind
Whose voice, lamenting, sounds so coldly kind,
Yet in their faith those waiting hearts abide
The time when turns forever that false tide.

In France they lie
Where lilies bloom,
Those flowers fair
For them made room.
Not vainly placed
The crosses stand
Within that brave
And stricken land;
Their honor lives,
Their love endures,
Their noble death
The right assures,

For they shall have their hearts' desire
They who, unflinching, braved the fire,
Across the fields their eyes at last shall see Through clouds and mist the hosts of victory.

placed on the propagating bed and the cuts pegged down to the sand. A wire in the shape of a hair pin will do this. Or the leaf may be cut into triangular pieces, with the rib as the apex, and these cuttings inserted in the sand as other cuttings are with the point down. Another method sometimes adopted is to cut the leaf in two parts lengthwise and the two halves are stood erect in the sand. The cutting bench should be shaded and if covered with glass and kept close the propagation will be more rapid and successful. The small leaves will shortly protrude from the sand and when the roots have attained a length of half an inch or more they can be potted in soil consisting of two parts loam, one part leaf-mold, one part well-rotted manure, and one part sand. They will require a warm temperature, and when watering be careful not to wet the foliage, especially where the sun shines upon them, or holes in the leaves will be the result. They should be shifted into larger pots as required and as the plants grow, coarser soil may be used in the potting. They make much handsomer plants when grown in shady locations rather than in the full sunlight.

Lily of the Valley.

It is often remarked that it is surprising more florists do not force lily of the valley for the holidays. While the forcing of this flower throughout the season had much better be left to those who make a specialty of it, for the demand during the winter is not at all steady, and for the smaller grower to attempt to grow his supply would be hazardous and probably result in so much waste that he would lose in the end. But well grown pots of lily of the valley at Christmas will always be disposed of and there is more or less demand for the cut blooms at that time, and a small amount can be grown and a good profit obtained. Well selected cold-storage pips are necessary—it would not pay to attempt to grow the freshly imported stock—and a place in the greenhouse where the pipes can be enclosed and the pots kept dark with a temperature of 80° maintained. It is not necessary to build an enclosure of wood, for bagging or old carpeting may be hung under a bench and shelves provided that will enclose a space large enough to grow what pots may be required. Three weeks with cold storage pips in this kind of an enclosure will bring it in on time, but the inexperienced grower had better take a little longer and if the flowers come too early, as soon as the bells form the pots can be moved into a cool house and they will be much improved; in fact, they should have a few days in the light to give the foliage proper color. When the pips are received the roots should be cut so that they can be placed in the shallow bulb pans, and then planted in clean sand, the tops of the pips being just even with sand with a dozen pips in a four-inch pan or 25 in a six-inch pan. Water with warm water to settle the sand about the pips, and if they stand above the sand when it settles fill in to the top of the pips, and then place the pans in the warm enclosure. Keep the sand wet and always water at a temperature as warm as the enclosure. When the flowers begin to show, care should be taken not to wet them when watering. As soon as the first bells begin to open place them in a partly shady location in a little cooler temperature and in a day or two they can be placed in full sunlight in a house with a temperature of 60°. They will then harden up nicely and keep longer.

Azaleas.

Keep the azaleas well spaced out as they begin to come into flower. The buds should be swelling rapidly and beginning to show color by early December. Never allow the plants to suffer for water, and where any are shipped out or carried into the residences they should be well watered before being taken out of the greenhouse. All plants that are sent away should be safely covered, and with azaleas it must be taken into consideration that they have been grown in a very warm temperature, and they chill easily. Plants that are forced as hard as these are to have them for the holidays, are damaged very quickly if they get chilled, even if they do not get frost-bitten. We have known azalea plants to look all right when undone, but the blooms wilted and never came out. Six to eight thicknesses of newspaper with a heavy outside wrapping should always be used in doing up these plants and more if the weather is severe. If the plants are not far enough advanced to have them in for Christmas a little higher temperature will be required, for to have them in at that date is a necessity in order to get the best price. Watering or syringing with warm water will assist some, but we do not like to do this unless absolutely necessary to get them in on time. Plants that are too far advanced can be moved into a cooler house, which will greatly benefit them for house culture.

Cinerarias.

As fast as these plants require it they should be repotted and growing to larger-sized pots. They are growing rapidly and should receive no check or they will become stunted. Keep them in a cool temperature, that they may be strong and sturdy, and above all things now do not crowd them, but space them out often; when the leaves begin to touch go over the bench and space them out. These plants are beautiful in early spring if well grown, but if they become crowded and get drawn they are but poor specimens. When the larger plants begin to show their buds, if they are in as large pots as can be easily handled a watering of liquid manure will help them finish their flowers. They are strong growers and great feeders and where the pots are full of roots will need a little stimulant. Constant watchfulness for aphids is required in growing these plants. Frequent fumigations will be necessary or standing on tobacco stems will keep the insects in check.

Polnsettias.

The plants are now forming their showy bracts and the worries of the grower are nearly at an end, for if they have come through to this time in good condition the disposal of the plants and flowers is all that remains to be done. Until the highly colored leaves have attained their full size, however, the same equal temperature should be maintained and then if found advisable a little drop in the temperature can be allowed, but it is far better to do this gradually and not subject the plants to too sudden a variation. The plants should now be all neatly tied to a stake, and, as before remarked, the neater the stake the better the appearance of the plant. It always has seemed strange to us that a grower will spend time and money in producing a crop and then spoil the appearance or the best sale of the plant by using a cheap, ill-looking auxiliary in attempting to save a penny. These plants can be disposed of at a good remunerative price if properly handled, and nice-looking painted stakes can be afforded. The plants grown for cut blooms should be kept tied erect that they may have straight stems. In the cutting and marketing of these blooms much disappointment and failure has been experienced by many growers, the bracts wilting very soon after cutting, and where this occurs they never recover. Some growers place the stems on a red hot coal immediately after they are cut and thus seal the end. Others plunge the stems in hot water, and both are said successfully to prevent wilting. Another plan is to wrap the blooms in wet newspapers, similarly to the manner of handling cut adiantums, and then placing the stems in deep jars of water. It will be found necessary to adopt one of these or some other method to prevent the blooms from wilting or many will be lost.

Flowers by Aeroplane.

Dunlop's, Toronto, Ont., appears to have been the first florist to send flowers by aeroplane. A customer at Beamsville, 75 miles distant by rail, ordered two wreaths last October and as they could not be delivered in time by ordinary methods, the purchaser made a 30-mile journey by aeroplane to get them.

WREATH OF PINE BRANCHES AND CONES.

FLORISTS' PALMS.Fuel Modification Order Brings Relief.

With the removal of many of the war restrictions and among them some of the orders of the fuel administration, there is doubtless much relief among the greenhouse men. Those who did observe the rules of the fuel administrator, and bought only the 50 per cent of fuel that was allotted them will be relieved to be able to go into the market and purchase further supplies, while those who placed a much wider interpretation on the order, and secured considerably more fuel than their quota, will possibly rest more easily since the order has been changed. The majority of the trade observed the ruling faithfully, and it is unfortunate for the general reputation that some few will subordinate patriotism to selfishness.

The easier regulation of the coal market will permit many greenhouses to be carried along at a better growing temperature than was thought possible at an earlier date, and this fact will be a considerable help in the palm houses, for while it is quite possible to keep various palms through the winter at a temperature of 45 degrees, and some species even lower, yet it means a loss of some time in growing them, and most growers feel much better satisfied to go into the houses in the morning finding a temperature of 55 degrees to 60 degrees, than to mentally and also physically shiver at 45 degrees. Of course, it may be said that insects will not spread to any great extent in so low a temperature, and this of itself has some value, especially while labor is scarce, but a plant grower usually prefers to have the opportunity of bringing freely and vigorously in bright weather and this cannot be done to the same degree in cold houses.

The past three months having been largely composed of bright and dry weather, the palms in general have continued in steady growth, and thus have required a considerable amount of water, not only at the root, but also overhead, and with the increased fire heat now required and likely to continue for the next three months at least, there will still be plenty of work for the hose. In the case of heavily rooted, or pot-bound palms, it is rather a difficult matter to overwater them, from the fact that the mat of roots in the bottom of the pot or tub will frequently raise the level of the soil to such a degree that the pot will not hold water enough for an excessive supply. Such plants as these are liable to suffer from dryness when sent out for house decoration unless they are occasionally submerged in a tub of water for an hour or so, the best time to do this being immediately after they are brought home from a decoration, and the same rule of treatment will apply equally well to plants received from a distance by express. In other words, make quite sure that the palms get water enough to soak them thoroughly, else they are liable to suffer in color, and also to lose the tips of their leaflets.

Notwithstanding the war conditions of the past summer, it has been possible to import kentia seeds, and since the palm seed industry has been more systematized, the quality of these seeds seems to be more regular, possibly from the fact that they are more carefully selected, with the result that the journey of several months' duration does not seem to injure them. Thus there is the satisfaction of knowing that some time in the future the product of the seed imports of 1918 may become the decorative material of some of our floral artists, but owing to the recent ruling in regard to the importation of plants, there is likely to be a serious gap in the supply for some years to come.

We can only hope that no germs of corn smut may be discovered on the kentia seeds at any time, for any such discovery would inevitably mean total prohibition of the palm industry, and the reversion of our artists to laurel roping and long leaf pine for their finest effects.

Those who still have kentias in sufficient quantity to make up some combination plants, will soon be getting busy with this operation, the plants so treated taking hold of the new soil more rapidly in December than in January. Spraying, vaporizing and fumigating are a part of the regular routine at this season, and when followed up faithfully, have a definite value, these processes being more easily carried out at this time of the year than at any other. It is quite probable that if one could empty the palm houses for a week or two each year, and then have a regular campaign of fumigating with hydrocyanic acid, there would be much less trouble in keeping the plants clean through the remainder of the year, but unfortunately it is extremely difficult to select a time and to get the houses emptied, the succession of crops keeping the space occupied practically all the time.

The necessity for light in the palm houses at this season has been frequently referred to in these notes, but yet the impression that palms are essentially shade loving plants still exists in the minds of some, and to those it is once more offered as a reminder, that little or no shading is required from November 1 to February 15.

WAR EMERGENCY CONGRESS COMMITTEE.

The committee appointed by President Totty to represent the S. A. F. at the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress of War Service Committees of American Industries, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America held at Atlantic City, N. J., December 3-6, comprising President C. H. Totty, Secretary John Young, Washington representative, Wm. F. Gude and George Asmus of Chicago, were in attendance throughout the congress. The committee was admitted to the congress under credentials which relegated it to voting power in Group No. 32 and in accordance with the programme they took part in the discussion of the different phases of the problem of reconstruction as they affected the florists' trade. The committee for its section, presented the following resolution, which was carried:

"The committee representing the Society of American Florists and the allied trades, an organization working under a charter passed by congress and signed by the late President McKinley, do hereby submit the following:

"Resolved, that we recommend the continuance of the war industries board for a limited period. We further recommend the creation of a central committee composed of representatives of the major business interests of the country to take up the work of the war industries board during the period of readjustment; also that official recognition shall be given the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, as this body would be of valuable assistance in economic liquidation of leftover war properties; further, the florist industries ask that all restrictions that have been imposed on them as war measures be removed, such as fuel restriction, and the importation and exportation of its products. These recommendations are of vital importance to the florist industry.

tion exerting influence in its principal field. The attendance at the congress was very large, including nearly 5,000 delegates, representing practically every industry. The prevailing idea of the congress was that industry should be allowed in great part to settle the various problems of reconstruction outlined in the congress without restrictions by the national Congress which might be derogatory to the homogeneous reconstruction.

National Publicity for Flowers.

A little over two weeks remain in which to complete the drive for $50,000 the amount required by our publicity committees to finance the liabilities they have assumed in the carrying out of the publicity campaign for 1918. As will be noticed by the financial report appended hereto, we are short about $4,665.

Can we make good? Can we raise this small sum among the very large number of florists who have not yet subscribed to the fund? It should not be difficult if the disposition to "let the other fellow do it" were eliminated. The "other fellow" has been doing it all along, in many cases duplicating his subscription or materially increasing it.

The "other fellow" has had an eye to the results forthcoming from the campaign, a very wide open eye. He realized that we should have to pass through a critical time in the florists' business, a time when the ordinary demand for flowers would of necessity be greatly reduced. He further realized that something should be done to create a new demand which should fill in the gap, and he believed that this was possible through our campaign. He made the campaign possible through his subscriptions and he has now the satisfaction of knowing that his views were correct, for he has enjoyed the benefits accruing from the greater demand which has been created. Yes! the "other fellow" has done his bit and is wondering why so many of his trade brethren cannot or do not want to look at the situation in the same way.

Surely, there can be no adverse criticism of our methods. We have pounded into the public mind the great usefulness of flowers in the conveyance of sentiments on birthdays, memorial days, such as Mothers' day, festivals, such as St. Valentine's day, Easter, Memorial day, Thanksgiving, and Christmas. We have induced the public to look upon flowers even as desirable wedding gifts. We have succeeded in getting our slogan, "Say it with flowers," firmly established and it is up to us to see that it remains so. Look at the front cover of the December issue of the Garden Magazine, displayed on every first-class news-stand in the country, and ponder upon our message as there presented. This is only a small part of our publicity work. Wherever we see a chance to put our slogan forward, we take advantage of it, so that flowers will come to mind as beautiful vehicles for the conveyance of sentiment, mediums within the reach of all but until now not properly considered as faithful carriers of messages of love, sympathy, regard or congratulation.

Help us to get together this small amount of money that our plans and work may not be retarded. Send in your cheque for whatever you feel you can afford, and make your contribution an annual one for the remaining years of the campaign. Make request of the secretary's office for the official forms if preferred, but let us have the required subscriptions without delay.

Florists who advertise in their local papers should send a us dollar for our Christmas electrotype. This electrotype will connect any establishment with our display advertisement in eight national magazines. For a description of other aids, drop a line for our list.

The following additional subscriptions are recorded annually for four years:

Floriculture at Cornell University.

With the signing of the armistice, the work of the department of floriculture is rapidly coming back to its former status. When war was declared many men students specializing in floriculture joined the colors and the classes in 1918 have been composed almost entirely of women students. The staff of instructors was also very much depleted, practically all having been engaged in some form of war service.

Early in January, 1918, E. C. Volz, instructor, resigned to become director of school and home garden work in Michigan. In February, E. A. White was relieved of his duties at the college to take up the organization and supervision of school and home garden work in western New York. This work was continued until July 1, 1918. July 1, M. B. Farnham, instructor, was called for service and was stationed at Camp Sevier, S. C. At the same time Miss L. A. Minns was given leave of absence that she might supervise the greenhouse and garden work at the

W. J. Keimel, Trustee.

Carnegie Institute for Experimental Evolution at Cold Spring Harbor, N. Y., thus relieving a man for war service. In September, C. L. Thayer, instructor, was called for service and is now stationed at Fort Adams, R. I. During the fall, Professor David Lumsden has been teaching the S. A. T. C. in meteorology. Dr. A. C. Beal was granted a sabbatical leave of absence for the year 1918-1919, which he is spending at Los Angeles, Calif.

During the last four weeks, many of the former students have expressed a desire to return to their work in floriculture and plans are being made to begin all the courses December 30. The college curriculum has been put on a four-term basis, and the work will continue throughout the summer. Thus a student who had completed the work of his junior year may return and take up his studies December 30 and graduate in October, 1919. Practically all of the teaching force will be available for the beginning of the new term.

During the war the educational work in floriculture has been retarded fully as much as has the work of commercial florists. The members of the department have accepted the conditions in the same loyal spirit of devotion to the country's best interests as have the commercial men. When the ruling of the fuel administrator regarding the 50 per cent coal supply for greenhouses became effective, one half of the glass areas of the College of Agriculture were closed. In the department of floriculture, the rose and carnation houses and a third house for miscellaneous plants were closed, the palm houses and the cooler houses for sweet peas and other plants being retained. The feeling of those in charge of the administration of the work of the college was that the college should adjust its work to meet the requirements of the fuel administrator in the same spirit as did the commercial florists.

It is the belief of all those in the department, that with the coming of peace, the educational work in floriculture in all American institutions will rapidly resume the important position it occupied before the war. Our young men are coming back with a greater realization of the advantages offered by American schools and colleges and there is no question but the floricultural industry will immediately feel the effects of the ending of the war and that a period of prosperity is before it.

New York Florists' Club.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The New York Florists' Club met in its rooms in the Grand Opera House building on the night of December 9, President Schenck in the chair. There was a large attendance, it being election night, which created considerable interest, but the election was not as exciting as some that have taken place in previous years. President Schenck, who had been renominated, declined to run for a second term. John Canning also declined to make the race, which left a clear field for Philip F. Kessler. Emil Schloss declined to be a candidate for vice-president. John H. Pepper and John G. Esler declined to run for secretary. Thomas B. De Forest and Alfred T. Bunyard declined to enter the race for treasurer. Wallace R. Pierson and Patrick J. Smith declined to run for the office of trustee. The only contests were for vice-president between P. W. Popp and Charles W. Knight, and for the election of three trustees out of four that were voted on. The officers-elect are as follows: Philip F. Kessler, president; P. W. Popp, vice-president, (re-elected); John Young, secretary, (re-elected); William C. Rickards, Jr., treasurer, (re-elected). E. C. Vick, Percy B. Rigby and A. T. De La Mar were elected trustees to serve two years.

President Totty of the S. A. F., who attended the meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce and war service committee at Atlantic City, N. J., December 3, reported on the proceedings. The discussions, at the Atlantic City meeting, took a wide range, many lines of business being represented. The most important to florists was the resolutions of the committee of the Society of American Florists, that all restrictions be removed from their business. Briefly stated, the object of the Atlantic City meeting was to discuss after-war reconstruction and to formulate the most feasible plans to return the business of the country to its normal channels, and if possible, improve on pre-war conditions.

A. L. Miller reported for the flower show committee, that it had been decided that no show should be held in the spring of 1919. It was recommended that the committee be continued or a new one appointed to arrange for a show in the spring of 1920.

Professor Andrews, who is either a clever scientist or a clever juggler, or both, gave an interesting exhibition of his arts, such as frying eggs on ice and otherwise reversing the laws of nature. Liquid air, it was said, was the basis of his demonstrations.

After the election, all the officers-elect, excepting A. T. De La Mar, who was not at the meeting, were called to the platform and spoke briefly, thanking the members for their votes of confidence. President-elect Kessler, who has been popular as chairman of the house committee, which in plain United States, is "serving the eats," made a hit by saying that he hoped he could fill the bill as president with equal satisfaction to the members. P. W. Popp expressed his thanks in a humorous vein. Secretary Young in thanking the members for their renewed confidence, paid a respectful tribute to the services of President Schenck during the past year. The club has a large membership in good standing and its business has been conducted without friction. Treasurer Rickards warmly thanked the members for his re-election. E. C. Vick spoke in genial appreciation of his election as trustee, and paid a friendly tribute to President Schenck. Percy B. Rigby gracefully appreciated the honor of being elected a trustee.

Philip F. Kessler.

President-Elect New York Florists' Club.

B. Hammond Tracy, of Wenhams, Mass., and Z. D. Blackstone, of Washington, D. C., were visitors at the meeting. Both were called to the platform and made pleasing remarks. Edward Haupt, a recently elected member, was introduced.

Appropriate resolutions were read and adopted on the recent deaths of Ralph M. Ward and Walter R. Siebrecht, club members, and Charles B. Weathered, Jr., son of ex-President Weathered, who was killed in action in France, and William Weber, son of Charles Weber, of Lynbrook, N. Y.

Resolutions were also adopted on the death of Mrs. Carl Geissler, wife of a club member.

Secretary Young read a letter from Major Edward A. Manda, a son of Joseph A. Manda, and a club member, now in France, returning thanks for the kindness of members and giving interesting notes on his surroundings and experience as one of Uncle Sam's boys. A letter was read from T. A. Havemeyer, suggesting a floral display, or floral displays in honor of returning soldiers. The letter brought on a sharp debate in which President Schenck and several members participated. The letter was laid on the table. It was the consensus of opinion that under present business conditions and an impending scarcity of flowers, nothing of the kind can be done. It was said, and is well known, that the club members have been very liberal in their contributions of flowers for the base hospitals. Doubtless they will again give flowers, but under present conditions, asking florists to give away large quantities of flowers, is next to asking a man to give away his business.

THE EXHIBITS.

A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., exhibited the commercial chrysanthemum Golden Mistletoe and the yellow pompon Christmas Gold. Elmer D. Smith & Co., Adrian, Mich., staged a new commercial chrysanthemum, white in color, named Victory; another, yellow, named Loyalty. The blooms in fair condition, were cut on November 28. Another of their exhibits was December Gem, a novelty of 1916. Joseph Rafferzeder, of Teaneck, N. J., exhibited his apple-blossom colored snapdragon, named Ruth Brewster. R. E. Sealy, Cedarhurst, L. I., showed a single chrysanthemum, named Bright View, a sport of Godfrey.

S. Van Riper, Dundee Lake, N. J., exhibited a vase of stevia.

P. F. Kessler exhibited for Charles Smith's Son, Woodside, N. Y., a vase of the chrysanthemum, Godfrey.

AWARDS ON EXHIBITS.

A. N. Pierson, Inc., for Golden Mistletoe chrysanthemum, preliminary certificate. It scored 86 points; for vase of Christmas Gold, preliminary certificate.

Joseph Rafferzeder, for snapdragon, Ruth Brewster, vote of thanks. Chas. Smith's Son, for vase of single chrysanthemums, vote of thanks. R. E. Sealy, Jr., Chrysanthemum Bright View, preliminary certificate, and for vase of seedlings, vote of thanks.

Elmer D. Smith & Co., for vase of new chrysanthemum, vote of thanks. These were shown in perfect condition, and the committee would like to see it again. S. Van Riper, for vase of stevia, vote of thanks.

PRESIDENT-ELECT KESSLER.

Philip F. Kessler, president-elect, was born in New York 45 years ago, where he received his schooling after which he was apprenticed to John Reck & Son, florists of Bridgeport, Conn. After completing his term, he returned to New York as manager of the Cut Flower Exchange, where he remained until 1905, when he went into business for himself, in which he has been uniformly successful. He is a life member of the Society of American Florists and the New York Florists' Club, and in the club has had long service on the house committee. He has been married 20 years and has five children, three girls and two boys.

A. F. F.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—E. F. Lemke, who retired from business a short time ago, will go to California for an indefinite stay.

HOUSTON, TEX.—Paul Carroll has the sympathy of the trade in the death of his father, a well-known and highly respected member of this community.

VIRGINIA, ILL.—Andrew Reither, proprietor of the Reither Greenhouses, left December 2 for San Antonio, Tex., where he will spend the winter, his health demanding a change of climate.

Chicago Florists' Club.

The regular meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club was held at the Hotel Randolph, December 5, President Lautenschlager in the chair. There was a good attendance, much interest being taken in the proceedings. Three new members were elected, Henry D. Neve, Grant Wiflin and Xavier Wojtkiewicz, Des Plaines. Vice-President Friedman, reporting for the garden committee, urged extended work among the school children. T. E. Waters was appointed committee in charge of arrangements for ladies' night at the January meeting. Otto H. Amling's paper on "Cost of Production," and Arthur A. Craig's plans for a working scheme of "Trade Co-operation," were presented a second time, bringing out considerable discussion. Mr. Amling's paper was printed in full in our last issue, also a summary of Mr. Craig's recommendations. President Bohannon of the Chicago Retail Florists' Association, advised organization and greater co-operation of all branches of the trade. P. J. Foley, referring to Mr. Amling's fuel cost figures, said they were excessively high compared with those of other growers during the same period. Mr. Foley's views on "Heating Economy," with figures, will be found in THE AMERICAN FLORIST of April 20, 1918, page 672, and he promised an extended paper on the subject, to be presented at an early meeting of the club. Hodgson Jolly gave a highly instructive talk on "Business Systems" and "Cost Accounting," illustrated by charts.

The exhibits committee, August F. Poehlmann, C. Frauenfelder and Albert Erickson, reported as follows: "Chrysanthemums Victory, Loyalty and December Queen, cut November 28, exhibited by Elmer D. Smith & Company, Adrian, Mich., were in such condition that a fair judgment cannot be given; Chrysanthemums Hilda, Canning and Golden Wedding, exhibited by George Ball, Glen Ellyn, are very well grown and are recommended for honorable mention. The variety Plume, a pleasing yellow, to us seems exceptionally fine, and we highly commend it. The vase of Ball's calendula is highly commended."

In the election of officers for the ensuing year there was no contest, George C. Weiland withdrawing from the race for the presidency. The affairs of the club, therefore, will be guided during 1919 by the following: A. J. Zech, president; Walter Amling, vice-president; A. T. Pyfer, secretary; Otto H. Amling, treasurer; F. Lautenschlager, director, carry-over directors being W. J. Keimel and T. E. Waters.

NOTES.

Fire last week destroyed the boiler-room, workshop and offices of David G. Grillbortzer at Alexandria, Va., entailing a loss of $3,500, not covered by insurance, and this will probably be increased through the freezing up of some of the houses. Luckily he maintains two separate ranges, having taken over the establishment of J. Louis Loose some time ago, and he quickly ran temporary piping from this to help out in the emergency. About five of the large houses are more or less damaged. The cause of the fire is unknown, it having started in the boiler-room shortly after noon.

Clifford H. Jenkins, son of C. L. Jenkins, of Anacostia, who before he entered the army worked with his father and brothers in the greenhouses, has been commissioned a second lieutenant in the army. He has been in France for some time. Another brother, Harry T. Jenkins, is also with the American forces "over there." When last heard from he had been selected to present himself at the officers' training camp, being given an opportunity for a commission. Whether he was successful is not known at this writing as no word has been received from him since October. Another brother, Lloyd Jenkins, was president of the florists' club last year.

Local florists were responsible for the raising of nearly $2,500 in the United War Work campaign. Members of the trade were asked to contribute in a body and George C. Shaffer, Z. D. Blackstone and William Marche canvassed the stores seeking contributions from employers and employees. In this way more than $1,300 was raised. The balance came from sales of flowers donated by retailers and wholesalers.

NOVEMBER SETS NEW RECORD.

Very unfavorable weather, combined with the influenza quarantine, did its worst for the Thanksgiving trade, with the result that the volume of business will about equal that of last year. High prices had the effect of also discouraging buying by the class to whom flowers are still a luxury. Chrysanthemums and good roses held the lead in the demand. There was a good sale of chrysanthemum pot plants while they lasted and a fair call on other flowering varieties. Made-up baskets moved slowly. The usual dullness which usually follows a holiday was lacking Friday and Saturday, both footing up totals well above the average. Taken as a month, local florists can hardly complain of November business. The demand has been brisk and steady with stock scarce to the cleaning up point the greater part of the time. As a rule, good prices prevailed and the volume for the month will set a new record.

NOTES.

Lewis Johnson, recently with Furrow & Co., Guthrie, Okla., has taken the position of general greenhouse foreman with Charles P. Mueller. Business was so good at the city store the Saturday following Thanksgiving that everything was sold out by 6 o'clock and the place closed for the evening. Some very fine Cincinnati begonias are being shown here, following the chrysanthemums.

W. H. Culp & Co. are cutting a fine crop of the late white chrysanthemum, Tipperary. These retail at $9 and $10 per dozen, while one lot of extra select blooms sold for $12 per dozen, November 30, which is probably the high record for this city.

SUPPLY LIMITED; PRICES SOAR.

Stock is very scarce, while the demand is proportionately heavy. The problem of the wholesalers is not that of getting enough stock to fill orders, for they cannot even approach this, but rather one of dividing the day's supply equitably, so that each one gets his just share. Prices, as an average, are the highest this market has ever known, not even excepting average holiday figures. In fact, they are what is asked, not what the buyer is willing to pay. The rose supply is fair, but not large enough. Among others, some excellent Columbia, Opheila, Russell and American Beauties are coming into the market. Many more carnations could be used if they were available. The limited number of chrysanthemums that are still coming into the market bring top prices. Easter lilies are a welcome addition to the supply. Callas sell well. Poinsettias are now helping out somewhat. Receipts in snapdragons are limited. More could be used if they were available. Violets both double and single, lily of the valley, and orchids all meet with an active demand. Sweet peas sell well, but there is not enough of them. Other receipts are stevia, calendulas, forget-me-nots, and baby primroses.

NOTES.

Mike Hanks, who was formerly with Julius Baer, and Harry O. Roth have opened a retail store at No. 5 West Seventh street. The name is the Paradise Floral Shop.

Lawrence Kresken was one of the winners in the recent election of the Young Men's Blaine Club, when he was elected a director of that organization.

C. E. Critchell was confined to his home for the past fortnight with an attack of influenza. Fortunately, the case is a mild one.

H. W. Sheppard, who was formerly connected with the Hill Floral Co. of this city, has purchased that company's store here.

The Wm. Murphy Co. has been getting in some excellent cyclamen plants, which have found a good market.

Visitors: Sam Seligman, New York; Jos. Hill, Richmond, Ind., and Eric Buckholz, Muncie, Ind. H.

The Late Mrs. Alonzo J. Bryan.

Mrs. Alonzo J. Bryan, wife of the prominent grower of Washington, N. J., died at her home in that city, December 1, following an attack of pneumonia. Mrs. Bryan was born in Washington, was active in church affairs, and held in the highest esteem by all who knew her. She was married to Mr. Bryan in 1908, who with two children and her parents survive.

LONDON, ONT.—H. J. Taylor, who has been suffering from an accident which happened nearly a year ago, is improving slowly.

VERMILION, O.—A. W. Copeland, of the firm of Copeland Bros., well-known florists of this city, died of pneumonia, November 14, age 31 years.

THE buying centers were thronged this week by retailers in search of holiday stock.

THE first of the new crop of calendars to reach us is that of Benjamin Hammond, Beacon, N. Y., well known manufacturer of insecticides and greenhouse paint and putty.

CUT FLOWER growers are reaping their harvest now. Lilies sold on the Chicago market this week at 25 cents each, wholesale, carnations 15 cents each. One grower is reported to have received $10,000 for his chrysanthemum cut this season. The plantmen are likewise prosperous.

THE senate has voted to return letter postage to two cents.

DEALERS say the demand continues remarkably brisk for all kinds of bulbs, outdoor as well as greenhouse stocks, the former no doubt materially influenced by the fine weather.

ALL general embargoes have been lifted by the railroad administration. Officials have authorized the announcement that there will probably be no necessity for any embargoes this winter.

RETAILERS in general trade lines look for a big holiday season this year and are preparing to take care of it. Early shopping indicates that the public is in a mood to spend money this year, due to termination of the war.

New Plant Quarantine Regulations.

A quarantine, with regulations governing the importations of nursery stock and other plants and seeds into the United States as a protection against the introduction of insect pests and plant diseases, has been signed by the Secretary of Agriculture, D. F. Houston. The order, known as Quarantine No. 37, will become effective on and after June 1, 1919, and the regulations under it will supersede those now in force governing the importation of such stock. The new regulations provide for the entry without permit or other compliance with the regulations, of

(1) Fruits, vegetables, cereals and other plant products imported for medicinal, food or manufacturing purposes.

(2) Field, vegetable and flower seeds.

In addition to the above, the following classes of nursery stock and other plants and seeds, when free from sand, soil or earth, may be imported under permit and in compliance with the other conditions of the regulations:

(1) Lily bulbs, lily of the valley, narcissus, hyacinths, tulips and crocus.

(2) Stocks, cuttings, scions and buds of fruits for propagation.

(3) Rose stocks for propagation, including Manetti, multiflora, Brier rose and Rosa rugosa.

(4) Nuts, including palm seeds, for propagation.

(5) Seeds of fruit, forest, ornamental and shade trees, seeds of deciduous and evergreen ornamental shrubs, and seeds of hardy perennial plants.

The importation of nursery stock and other plants and seeds not specifically enumerated in the regulations and not covered by special quarantines or other restrictive orders now in force is prohibited on and after June 1, 1919.

The regulations permitting the entry of the restricted classes of plants, as noted, are similar to those hitherto in force and take into account the classification of countries into those maintaining inspection and certification of nursery stock in accordance with the requirements of the plant quarantine act, and countries which have not made provision for such compliance with the act. Copies of the quarantine and regulations soon will be available for distribution.

Washington Rulings and Regulations.

There are many items of interest to florists in the revenue bill introduced into the Senate, December 6. The House of Representatives in passing this measure included a tax of two cents per gallon on gasoline. If adopted, this would require a considerable outlay by the trade because of the large number of motor delivery wagons and trucks in operation, to say nothing of the gasoline engines used for various purposes at the ranges and in connection with refrigerating plants in stores and wholesale houses.

Every domestic corporation will be required to pay a business tax of $1 for each $1,000 of the excess of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the close of the preceding annual period used by the corporation for purposes of making its income tax return. This provision goes back to July 1, 1918, but does not apply in any year to any corporation which has not engaged in business during the preceding year ending June 30. Any person who fails to pay his tax lends himself liable to its payment and a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

The return of the two cent postage rate will result in considerable saving to the trade, this being provided for in the Senate draft of the bill.

B. F. L.

Insecticide Adulterations.

Greater food production having stimulated the manufacture of many new insecticides and fungicides, the United States department of agriculture, has increased its efforts to protect purchasers against fraud in connection with such preparations. The record for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shows that 132 cases of alleged violations of the interstate law were reported to the department with recommendations that the facts be transmitted to the attorney general to institute criminal action or seizure proceedings. One hundred and ninety-five cases involving technical or non-flagrant violations were disposed of and action was taken by the department to place in abeyance 726 samples which upon examination were found to be not adulterated or misbranded, or were from shipments of the same goods made prior to shipments for which the manufacturer had been convicted, the manufacturer after citation conforming to the requirements of the law.

Night Message Rates Reduced.

Herbert Brown, superintendent of the Western Union office, at Chicago, has announced a scale of reduced rates for short, overnight messages, effective January 1. The new service, known as night messages, is designed to supplement the night-letter service. The minimum night-message rate is 20 cents, and for 25 cents ten-word overnight messages may be sent a considerable distance, while the maximum rate is 50 cents, as against a maximum of $1, heretofore charged.

COLD WEATHER BRINGS ADVANCED PRICES.

The cold weather has put the prices of all cut flowers very much above those of last week. The heavy frosts have cut down the supply of all chrysanthemums and very little first-class stock is now being offered. In pink, Helen Frick is the leader and Appleton is the only good yellow. Not very many pompons are to be had as they are about over for the season. Roses have had a sharp advance in prices from last week. They are becoming scarcer every day and there is no probability that prices will become lower until next spring. Good grade Mrs. Russell are wholesaling at $2.50 per dozen. First grade Hadleys, $2.25 per dozen. Red Radiance, Shayver and Ophelia from $1.50 to $2.00, according to quality. American Beauties are not to be had as yet. Cecile Brunner are held at $3.00 per dozen bunches and not very large bunches at that. The shipping demand is very heavy for roses in all grades and the wholesalers report that they are unable to fill all orders in full. Carnations are improving in quality every day, and now that roses are so high, are beginning to come into their own again. Matchless is the leading white and Belle Washburn is the most popular red. Benora, which always was a favorite here, owing to its keeping qualities, is the best fancy. The cold snap has cut down the supply of violets to a large extent. Prices are much higher this week for this old favorite. Poinsettias are being very prominently displayed by all the stores. Both pot plants and extra good cut stock is being offered. The supply comes from the southern part of the state. Gardenias are becoming rather scarce and are not up to the usual good quality that one expects at this season of the year. Cattleyas are prominent everywhere. The demand for them is steady. Paper White narcissus are becoming more plentiful every day, but are chiefly used for funeral work. Large offerings of cut ericas are to be seen and are in much demand. The market is well supplied with the California red-berry and the quality seems to be excellent this season. Quite a lot of English holly was displayed for Thanksgiving and cleaned up readily. Begonia Lorraine is becoming quite plentiful, as are cyclamens. Ericas in pots were never finer than those being offered this season. Celosias are plentiful and sell well.

NOTES.

The trade reports the best ever in Thanksgiving business. There was a large supply on hand of nearly all seasonable stock and it was quickly disposed of. The high prices of roses forced many buyers to turn to pot plants. In these 9,000 Bostons were fine sellers. A few azaleas were seen, but of rather poor quality. Ericas were great favorites. The florists were so encouraged by the volume of the Thanksgiving trade, that all of them are making preparations for one of the best Christmas seasons on record.

The Art Floral Co. had the large decoration at the Union League club last week. The rooms were transformed into a vast '49 mining camp. Several carloads of redwood trees were shipped from Occidental for the occasion. The decorative scheme was ably carried out by P. Vincent Matraia. Some of the trees were over 20 feet high. The floors were covered with autumn leaves to the depth of six inches. Mr. Matraia received many encomiums for his very unique piece of work.

J. A. Axell, manager of the E. W. McLellan Co., says his firm enjoyed the largest Thanksgiving day shipping trade in its history. Much more stock could be handled if it were available, especially roses. The firm's greenhouses at Burlingame are cutting heavily of all the standard varieties of roses, but even at that they are having difficulty in filling all orders. Violet shipments continue to be steady and heavy.

Dan MacRorie says shipping trade in the plant line was very heavy at the nursery. Large shipments of cyclamens, begonias and foliage plants were sent to the southern part of the state. Superintendent Andrew McDonald promises to have many fine novelties for the Christmas trade.

Frank R. Mills, of Palo Alto, is in with a fine cut of carnations. He also has several houses of Begonia Lorraine and cyclamens. He reports a steady business right along, and is expecting to have a rush at Christmas. He is shipping his carnations to the up country florists every day.

The Chinese growers along the peninsula are now sending in quantities of small late chrysanthemums. The Japanese growers have finished their cut for this season. They claim that nearly all the growers operated at a loss this year, owing to unfavorable weather conditions.

Henry Maier, of the Hillsborough Nurseries, at Hillsborough, is preparing for a busy season in the plant line. He says the resumption of planting is going to be quite general this season, and is preparing to handle a large stock.

Podesta & Baldocchi made a beautiful display during Thanksgiving week. Their ericas and poinsettias were splendid. They featured cattleyas very extensively. Business here was much in excess of former years.

Frank Pelicano, of Pelicano, Rossi & Co., is very much pleased over the amount of Thanksgiving day business transacted by his firm. He expects the coming holiday business to surpass that of any previous year.

Manager Patrick Orr, of the A. O. Stein store, says his firm had a splendid Thanksgiving trade. Several large decorations added to their usual demand kept the force very busy during last week.

M. H. Ebel, of Sacramento, says his Thanksgiving trade was much ahead of former years. He is spending several days here arranging for his Christmas shipments of plants and flowers.

The firm of Leopold & Pollard, of Santa Rosa, has dissolved. Mr. Pollard retires from the firm to accept a position with the Art Floral Co.

FLORISTS' CLUB ELECTIONS.

Election of officers for the ensuing year and preparations for the annual banquet on January 2, 1919, were the principal items of business at the December meeting of the florists' club. For 1919 the officers are: William Newport, president; R. W. Bilson, vice president; Robert Davidson, 139 Second street, secretary-treasurer, and Joseph Trandt, George E. Nagengast, Jr., and Howard Menand, trustees for two years. To promote the attendance and aid in making the annual banquet a success, President Newport named a committee of five as follows: Fred A. Danker, chairman; Howard Menand, Byron C. Holmes, John J. Haggerty and Frank R. Bilson. It was decided to assess each member who attends the function $1, any deficit in the cost to be paid out of the club treasury. Fred A. Danker reported on advertising for Thanksgiving. A full page advertisement signed Albany Florists' Club, appeared in the two local evening papers, calling the attention of the public to flowers for use during Thanksgiving. The advertisement appeared Tuesday, November 26. Mr. Danker said that he noticed very gratifying results for three days in his business, and the other retailers also felt the increased demand for flowers. The advertisement attracted attention and favorable comment from many who saw it. Mr. Danker also reported that another flower show for the members will be held at the March meeting. The wives and women relatives and friends of the members will be welcome that night, and refreshments will be served. William E. John, of Schenectady, was elected a member.

NOTE.

Retailers on the whole report good business through Thanksgiving week.

Chrysanthemums sold best, while carnations dragged. The leading retailers say that their Thanksgiving business this year was better than a year ago, due in part to the advertising campaign conducted at the suggestion and with the co-operation of the S. A. F.

CHRISTMAS PLANT SHORTAGE THREATENED.

Flowers are still very scarce and high priced. There has not been enough stock received any one day to fill orders complete, but each customer gets his share. All seem to be satisfied to get a little. Carnations appear to be the most in demand, with the shortest supply. Good blooms are selling at $8 per 100. We look for this price to continue for some time, as no one seems to have any great amount this year. Many growers have shut up their houses for the winter, which will shorten the supply and put more buyers on the market. Lilies are also very scarce, but we can look for heavier shipments very soon; $20 to $25 per 100 is the best price. Paper Whites are now coming in larger numbers and prospects are for a steady cut from now on. Six dollars per 100 is the selling price. The usual varieties of roses are arriving each day, but not enough for all. Good Russell are in demand and sell at good prices. American Beauties are also selling very well. Stevia is very popular. Limited quantities of lily of the valley are received each day. The weather has been cool and cloudy, which is very unfavorable for growing. All the stores are preparing for a heavy Christmas business and most of them are putting their spare time to making holiday novelties. Many beautiful wreaths and baskets are seen in the shop windows. Plants are going to be scarce, as all the growers are oversold now. The first holly and trees reached here last week. The former is very high and scarce and the stiff prices will keep the street fakirs from handling it this year and the florists will do more in this line. The supply houses are working overtime, which indicates a large business. Boxwood is very much in demand and is scarce.

NOTES.

Mike Kronis is improving each day and expects to be able to attend to business at his store in East Liberty by the holidays.

E. C. Ludwig has made several changes in his north side store, which give more working space.

FUNERAL WORK AGAIN BIG FACTOR.

With funeral work again abnormally heavy, local florists are finding it difficult to get enough stock to take care of this feature of trade. The policy of greenhouse owners, allowing part of their glass to become idle because of labor shortage and anticipated restrictions in fuel, is to a great extent responsible for short supply. All flowers are scarce, and prices are higher than ever before known here. Carnations, which ordinarily sell for $1.50 at this period, are now $3 per dozen. Roses range from $4 to $8, and sweet peas from 75 cents to $1.50 per bunch. There are no violets. Such pot plants as cyclamens, begonias and primroses, together with poinsettias, will be the mainstay of the Christmas supply. These are figuring to some extent in funeral work, and are expected to help out in the holiday demand. Unusually attractive effects are seen in small pots and trays containing Paper White narcissus. There is a large variety of unique designs. So far, peace has brought little relief in the labor situation, and nearly all florists are short-handed.

J.

Boston.

HIGH PRICES TO CONTINUE.

Business has shown considerable improvement and a good holiday demand is expected. Flowers are high in price and are going to continue so as stock is extremely scarce. Chrysanthemums are about done for, which leaves the market with but carnations and roses. Violets are out of the question. Carnations are selling at $7 and $8 per 100 and the call for short stemmed roses is so great that growers are asking eight cents for 9-inch stock and 10 cents for 12-inch, and these clean up daily.

NOTES.

John J. Cassidy, the Beacon street florist, who has been a member of the city sinking fund commission for a number of years, is a candidate for councilman.

Thomas Roland of Nahant has a large supply of flowering plants for the holidays, among them begonias, cyclamens, heather, orange trees and ferns.

John J. O'Brien, with a store at the corner of Charles and Beacon streets, is having one of his best years. His plant trade is remarkably good.

B. A. Snyder & Co. are handling a large trade in their new store. Holiday orders are ahead of last year.

H. M. Robinson & Co. are busy with big stocks of roses, carnations, sweet peas and florists supplies.

Business at Carbone's is very good and the store is attractively arranged for the holiday rush.

Wm. Walker, of Salem, has some of the best grown poinsettias seen in this market.

Welch Bros. Co. report very good business and fine holiday sales in sight.

RED RUSCUS

We import the raw material and dye it a CHRISTMAS RED.

Our importation consisted of the best EE quality and the same standard of second quality Ruscus which is shorter and very suitable for wreaths and basket work.

Our EE Ruscus is worthy of due consideration, as it is positively devoid of any black spots acquired through imperfect growth. Economically it is the best simply because we have not used chemicals in the preparation of it that would tend to increase its weight.

STOCK IS STILL VERY SCARCE.

Stock of all kinds is still very scarce and it is impossible to fill anywhere near all the orders that are being received. The wholesalers are doing the best they can to take care of their customers by dividing the stock as equally as possible so each one will have some to do business with. The out-of-town buyers have no idea how scarce stock really is, and do not appreciate what good treatment they are receiving until they visit the market personally, which many did the past week. Prices are high, but the grower is entitled to all that he can get, for everyone will admit that the first six or eight months were disastrous and the loss was considerable which seems to be surprising to many who never conducted a greenhouse so cannot realize the high cost of production. One retailer, who is a heavy buyer in this market, says that prices are rather high at present, but taking everything into consideration he has no cause to complain for there were times during the past year that he secured stock at such ridiculously low prices, considering the high cost of production, that he often wondered how long the grower would be able to stand it. He also mentioned that it was a good thing for the retailer in general, for flowers have always been held too cheap in most cases, and that the present scarcity has demonstrated the fact that the buyer in nine cases out of 10, will pay the price, even though he might kick a little just from the force of habit. There is never anything left when the wholesale stores close at night, and while the buyer may think he is paying exceptionally high prices, he probably would change his mind if he could hear what the dealer is offered by some who would be glad to secure it at any figure. The outlook for Christmas is none too encouraging for a large supply of stock as far as this market is concerned, and the only possible thing that will improve conditions is the best kind of clear weather from now on. Prices will be higher than ever this year and everything points to a great scarcity in all lines, especially roses. Flowering plants are impossible to obtain at any price in this vicinity, and there will probably be more foliage stock used than ever before to meet a situation which everyone will have to make the best of. The offerings will consist of American Beauty and all the other roses, carnations, poinsettias, lilies, callas, sweet peas, daisies, violets, orchids, gardenias, snapdragons, calendulas, pansies, lily of the valley, mignonette, Paper White narcissus, and possibly a little other miscellaneous stock, which from present indications, will all be in exceedingly short supply. The supply houses are all doing a rushing business and report a heavy call for artificial flowers, which will play an important part in the Christmas offerings this year. Ruscus, frieze and other items in this line are in strong demand. Boxwood is going to be used to a large extent, and so will magnolia wreaths, finished off with such items so as to present the proper Christmas effect. Holly is scarce at this writing and but very few red winter berries are offered. Lycopodium is more plentiful than it was at first expected it would be, but is cleaning up well, owing to a strong early demand. Many orders have already been placed for cut flowers, and from present indications the Christmas trade this year will be one of the best ever, notwithstanding the outlook for a great scarcity of stock which will be made possible by the high prices that the retailer will be obliged to get to meet the conditions that present themselves.

NOTES.

O. A. & L. A. Tonner have just received several tons of paper shell pecans from their groves in Georgia which they are offering to the trade in five pound boxes at wholesale prices and are an exceptionally good buy to anyone who wishes to take advantage of this low price. They are quoting their famous Jumbo brand in five-pound boxes at $3.50 delivered postpaid to the trade anywhere in the United States and their medium sized grade for $3.00 postpaid anywhere. They are all from this year's crop and are guaranteed to be absolutely fresh. Many of the local florists have been buying their pecans from the Tonners for a long time and have been so satisfied with them that they have become regular customers.

Burglars entered the establishment of Wietor Bros., John Kruchten Co., and Archie Spencer on the night of December 1, but did not get much for their trouble. Wietor Bros. lost some postage stamps. Archie Spencer is minus a grip, double-barreled shotgun, raincoat and a little loose change. Henry Kruchten lost some shaving utensils. The work was evidently that of amateurs, for they overlooked many valuables at all the establishments that were worth much more than that which was taken.

Walter Poehlmann, son of Adolph Poehlmann, was one of the young men who had joined the colors to be given an honorable discharge at the Northwestern University last week where he was enrolled in the radio department. Lieutenant John Poehlmann is still at Camp Pike, Ark., and Earl Poehlmann, son of August Poehlmann, is at the same replacement camp.

Allie Zech, of Zech & Mann, newly elected president of the Chicago Florists' Club, celebrated his thirty-fourth birthday, December 9. He reports orders as very numerous for Christmas and is looking for an early cleanup in all lines of stock, judging from the many orders that have already been booked.

John Hoerber, who looks after Hoerber Bros.' range at Des Plaines, helped out at Hoerber Bros.' down-town store a couple of days last week while his brother, F. C. Hoerber, was on the sick list. This firm is cutting a fine grade of roses and will be in fairly good crop for Christmas.

The bowling team known as "The Centrals" and consisting of Ed. Martin, Fred. Price, Bill Lorman, John Huebner and Peter Olsem, are participating in the annual city tournament now being held at Bensinger's West Randolph street alleys.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is offering a large supply of choice orchids in addition to a most complete line of all other seasonable stock. Cut poinsettias, especially pink, are in strong demand here this week.

Harold Amling, son of E. C. Amling, who is a student at the Culver Military Academy, Culver, Ind., arrived here last week to attend the funeral of his grandfather, whose death was recorded on our last issue.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. are handling a large quantity of choice boxwood in addition to their regular line of all other seasonable stock. Green goods of all descriptions are in good supply at this establishment.

Lieutenant Willard Asmus, son of George Asmus, is at Birmingham, Ala., with the troops in the capacity of instructor.

Poehlmann Bros. Co.'s supply department is busy as busy can be this week and the entire force is concentrating its efforts on packing up and filling the Christmas orders that keep arriving by telegram and in every mail. The plant department has had a heavy call for stock this season and is sold out in all blooming plants for the holidays. The cut flower department is moving all the stock faster than it comes in and while a good cut of roses and carnations is in sight for the big day, the demand promises to be much heavier than the supply.

Adam Kirscht and wife, of Niles Center, are the possessors of a gold star that has turned back to blue. Some time ago the casualty list carried the names of both their sons as follows: "Adam D. Kirscht, killed in action, and Matthew, wounded in action." On December 8, the list carried the correction, "Previously reported killed, now reported prisoner in Germany, Adam D. Kirscht."

Wietor Bros. have already booked a large number of orders for Christmas for both roses and carnations. N. J. Wietor says that his firm will have a good supply of stock if the weather from now on is favorable, especially carnations, which will be scarce in general notwithstanding the extreme scarcity of other stock.

B. J. Delinke, who closed his retail store to enlist in the navy when the United States entered the great war, was given an honorable discharge this week. He expects to get back into the flower business after a couple of months' vacation.

E. C. Pruner, representing Poehlmann Bros. Co., is back from a trip through the southwest and will take things easy until after the holidays. Fred Longren has returned from a short trip through Indiana and Ohio.

Some out-of-town wholesalers and retailers offered as high as $12 and $15 per 100 for carnations this week while they were in the city, which is largely responsible for the high jump in prices. One large wholesaler says that certain dealers have called up the greenhouses offering fabulous prices for carnations, which leads the average grower to believe that his commission house is not getting enough for his stock and in some instances causes him to ship to another house what stock he really intended to go to his regular outlet. The high prices given above may have been paid in many instances the past week, but judging from what the average dealer is asking now the real price is considerably less.

Peter Reinberg is in fair crop with roses and will have a good cut of Mrs. Chas. Russell, Killarney Brilliant, Richmond, Milady and Champ Weiland for Christmas. Peter Showsboe, foreman of the Reinberg greenhouses, says that Milady, Mrs. Chas. Russell, Sunburst and Ophelia have proved so satisfactory that they will propagate 25,000 of each variety for their own use next season.

George Asmus has returned from Atlantic City, N. J., where he acted as one of the committee appointed by President Totty to represent the S. A. F. at the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress of War Service Committees of American Industries, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America held there December 3-6.

The A. L. Randall Co. is featuring a good supply of fancy stevia, which will be a big item with them for the holidays. The supply department is having a brisk call for artificial goods, and notwithstanding the extreme shortage of other stock.

Geo. McCallum, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who has been stationed at the Municipal Pier in the Marine Service, left December 7, for New York, where he will be placed on ocean duty. Mr. McCallum expects a commission as ensign in March.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. report business as brisk, with an early cleanup each day. Boxwood of fine quality is in exceptionally brisk demand at this house and the same applies to all other items in the green list.

The George Wittbold Co. reports a grand cleanup in all blooming stock for Christmas, with a strong demand for cyclamens of which it had a splendid supply this season.

Erne & Company are looking forward to a brisk Christmas trade and will have a good supply of stock notwithstanding the outlook for the greatest scarcity in years.

Percy Jones, Inc., is strong on lilies this week, which are commanding exceptionally high prices owing to their fine quality and the extreme scarcity in this market.

At Kyle & Foerster's store the demand is heavy for American Beauty roses which are now arriving in fair supply in addition to their regular line of stocks.

Phil Schupp says that J. A. Budlong will have a good supply of stock for Christmas, but the demand promises to be far greater than the supply.

Miss Sylvia Sternheim and Dave Arends, of Kennicott Bros. Co.'s office force, are both sick at home with the Spanish influenza.

A. J. Stahelin and wife, of Detroit, Mich., were the guests of A. Miller and wife at their home here the greater part of this week.

LIMITED SUPPLY AT HIGH PRICES.

The weather during the first part of December has been dark and gloomy, with temperatures above freezing, but these facts have not curtailed business to any noticeable extent, as the demand has been exceptionally snappy, ever since the Thanksgiving holiday. The market has been in a very unbalanced condition, as the supply of cut stock has been decidedly on the short side, and prices have soared on roses and carnations, on account of the big demand, and unequal supply. Blooming plants are appearing in the flower shops in excellent quality and variety. Azaleas made their appearance during the week, also poinsettias, and Jerusalem cherries. The windows of the flower shops here are resplendent with their holiday decorations of Christmas wreaths, bells, baskets, and other novelties, and the sale of these, in advance, has been better than any previous year.

NOTES.

The reports of the various florists in regard to the November business, show a decided increase over the same month last year, although the reports are not entirely satisfactory, on account of the great handicap of the shortage of cut flowers which the florists experienced all during the month. If it had not been for this drawback, the receipts would have been much larger. Prices have increased substantially during the month, and the cost of production is now balanced by the price obtained for the flowers.

This city has been most unfortunate in experiencing a second attack of the influenza epidemic, as within the past four or five days, over 250 cases have been reported to the board of health. Every effort is being made to check the epidemic, schools have been closed, and the public are obliged to wear masks in all places of amusement, churches, stores, etc., in fact any place where three or more persons are employed. This order has not affected business to any appreciable extent, as yet.

The Flick Floral Co. is showing some fine, full-flowered azalea plants, Cincinnati and Lorraine begonias, and poinsettias. The display of Christmas stocks in the artificial line, such as wreaths, etc., is especially attractive, as this firm is always noted for the novelties displayed.

Ed Wanninghoff reports a big advance demand for Christmas wreaths, etc., and orders from out of town, for the Christmas trade. Cyclamens of especially fine quality were displayed at his store the past week.

The New Haven Floral Co. has an excellent line of blooming plants in its greenhouses for the holiday trade, and is expecting a fairly large crop of roses and carnations.

Cattleyas and other seasonable orchids are in their prime at the range of W. J. & M. S. Vesey and the houses show promise of a splendid cut for the holidays.

H. K.

St. Louis.

PRICES HIT HIGH MARK.

The local market is ruled by high prices, and, like most others, is almost incapable of supplying the demand in anything in the line of flowers. The stock generally is of very good quality, but prices are exorbitant. The retail florists are turning away customers, because of their inability, and in quite a few cases, because they do not wish to hold them up for the prices necessary to come out on top. The condition is really serious, and, while lots of customers will buy regardless of the price, still the retailer is losing customers who refuse to be held up. There is an intrinsic value to a flower, and it is our opinion that no carnations, no matter how good and no matter how scarce, are worth $17.50 to $20.00 per hundred. The business will suffer eventually if this condition is not remedied soon, as the public will class the florists as some of them already do, as plain profiteers. In greens, the market is fairly well supplied, and the prices are just a little above normal.

NOTES.

A great proportion of the funeral work one sees now is made up of artificial flowers, and it certainly is nothing to brag about. The general appearance of the work is poor, which is a criterion of the seriousness of the present market.

Plants have been having a good sale in place of hospital bouquets, and if this keeps up, there will be a shortage of the few varieties we have for Christmas.

Oscar Ruf, who has been in a hospital for a few weeks with the flu, is out again, and expects to get back into harness soon.

SCARCITY OF STOCK CONTINUES.

Locally, the market conditions remain about the same as in our last week's report, in as far as the stock of cut flowers is concerned. Stock in all lines is far short of the demand, making it extremely difficult for wholesalers to fill orders with any degree of certainty, and many retailers are padding their funeral designs with artificial roses, carnations and chrysanthemums. The demand for this artificial stock, while always good at Christmas, is better than ever this year. Even greens are short of the demand, and ferns are bringing $5 per 1,000. Good carnations are priced at $8 per 100. Short roses, eight cents each up to 20 cents for larger pink and white. American Beauties are bringing Christmas figures. Violets and sweet peas are $2 per 100. Orchids are the only flowers that do not clean up daily. These have an excellent call, but are beyond the reach of many smaller retailers, whose trade will not stand the price. Boxwood and southern smilax are in good demand, as are ground pine and moss wreaths. All other Christmas stock is moving in fine shape and the late buyers are going to be disappointed. Buy, but "Do it now."

NOTES.

Joe Williams, probably the oldest employe at the J. M. Gasser Co.'s greenhouses at Rocky River, and known to every florist in this city, had the misfortune to fall into a vat of hot water in the boiler house at the greenhouses while going about his work. Luckily, R. Emsley, who was chosing by, pulled him out at once, but he was badly scalded and his flesh came off with his clothes. He was submerged almost to his armpits. He was rushed to Lakeside hospital. Mr. Williams was just recovering from another accident, when he was knocked from his wagon.

Sergeant Joe Kolisky, formerly manager of the Taylor Flower Shop, spent an 11-day furlough with friends in this city. He is looking and feeling fine, and makes an ideal American soldier boy. Joe says that on his return he is going into the flower game on his own hook. He is stationed at Camp

SPLENDID CHRISTMAS DEMAND IN SIGHT.

With the Thanksgiving rush over, the florists are taking stock and preparing for the holiday rush. From all indications there will be an ample supply but no superabundance. At present there is a scarcity of all stocks. Chrysanthemums have gone and there is nothing to take their place. Trade continues good and from all indications there will be a substantial raise in prices for the holidays. There is a noticeable increase in social activities especially among the younger set and the old time trade along these lines in general is improving, which makes the corsage bouquet business good and provides an outlet for the many beautiful orchids in this market. A good supply of cemetery wreaths has been made ready as well as many pretty novelties in fern dishes, vases, baskets, bowls and attractive birch boxes. Many of the trade have already arranged their schedules of Christmas prices, offerings to vary from $3 to $5 for Aaron Ward roses to $10 up to $18 for American Beauty. Russell, Richmond, the Killarneys, Ophelia and others will vary from $4 to $6 per dozen. Carnations will be offered at $2 and $3. Easter lilies $5 per dozen, cut poinsettias $6 and orchids $2 each. Pot plants, of which there will be no small assortment will include a varied quantity of ferns.

NOTES.

The Joy Floral Co. is expecting a fine lot of everything just right for the holidays, although the supply at this writing is scant. They will have roses in excellent assortment, carnations and narcissi, the latter now coming along splendidly. This firm will have an unusually fine lot of pot plants. While there will be plenty of stock in all lines for their local trade as well as for the Chattanooga store, they have decided not to wholesale anything and are turning away orders. Orchids at this establishment are especially fine and have advanced in price from $1 to $1.50 each.

Geny Bros. are looking forward to a fine trade and will be well equipped to handle it. Beautiful roses will be a feature, among them Columbia which they have grown most successfully this year. Among the attractive offerings here will be dainty wicker baskets priced from $4 up. Birch boxes filled with flowering plants and ferns will range in price from $5 to $7.50. Their plant stock is very fine in quality.

The McIntyre Floral Co. will have on sale something the other stores are not offering, namely a fine lot of azaleas in bloom. They have about 300 beautiful plants, all large fine specimens. Another strong feature will be fine offerings of roses in variety. As with other local florists, stock is now scarce but they manage to fill each day's orders satisfactorily.

L. H. Haury & Son will have a fine stock of baby ramblers and many other flowering plants. The roses at their range are looking well and will be in right for the holiday demand.

BUSINESS ABOVE COMPLAINT.

Following the Thanksgiving business there was a fair week's trade, but a falling off in funeral work. Carnations are scarce and poor in quality, but there is a limited supply of good roses. The price is high on all grades, however. Violets have advanced to double their former figures and will remain so until after the holidays.

NOTES.

December 9 was ladies' night with the florists' association. Fred Zoller gave a very entertaining talk on the beauty spots of southern California, illustrated with colored slides.

George Kramer has been turning out some very attractive baskets and other Christmas offerings for Salter Bros.

J. B. Keller Sons report a splendid Thanksgiving trade. They are at present making a fine display of orchids.

Charles Felton, of Buffalo, was a business visitor last week, purchasing Christmas supplies.

George T. Boucher has recovered his auto which was stolen recently.

H. P. Neun is showing some excellent solanums, richly berried.

MARKET SHOWS HEALTHY CONDITION.

The past week as far as prices are concerned had a distinct holiday flavor; $8 to $10 per hundred for carnations was thought very good. Christmas figures and they have often sold for much less, but none worth having sold during the last few days for less than $8, and the first selection, $10. Nothing in roses, and very few at that, for less than $6, while specials brought $20 to $25 and Russell as high as $40. Easter lilies sold for $20 and callas, $25. While this condition is unprecedented, it is a healthy state of affairs brought about entirely by the scarcity of flowers. Growers admit they would have to get more for their flowers this year because they cost so much more to grow, and here it is handed to them in a measure greater than their expectations. The cut flowers of nearly all kinds coming to the market are fully one-third in volume below that of last year at this time. The quality is fine, there being in roses, particularly the specials, some very good stock, but only enough to whet the appetite and keep the prices up. American Beauties are the exception, there being sufficient for all demands. There is still quite a quantity of chrysanthemums in large flowered sorts and bunch pompons. Jennie Nonin, Seidewitz, Mistletoe and Bonaffon are the leading sorts. Quite a quantity of carnations are being received; the quality is fine, but too large a percentage are white. Easter lilies are in fair supply, and will be until after January 1, and then—well, we shall see. Callas will be very good stock this year. They are in demand for funeral sprays. Cattleyas are about equal to the call white violets are scarce. Sweet peas are none too plentiful. They should certainly turn in winning cards this year. Calendulas and snapdragons are finding a good market.

December 9.—There was a very fair supply of flowers for the day's business, but not enough for the demand even at prices higher than a number of items brought at Christmas last year. Mrs. Russell roses are leaders, being preferred to American Beauty of the same length of stem and price. Very few chrysanthemums are offered except rather passe pompons.

NOTES.

The December meeting of the florists' club was attended mostly by growers and commission men who talked shop. That they were immensely pleased with their returns so far this season, was the opinion of all who spoke. Furthermore, it was thought that they would even yet reach a higher level. Adolph Farenwald thought it would be wise on the part of growers, in the experience of the past three years, when there were at times periods of great over-production, to hold on to their money and not put it all into cash right away. Let the demand get a little ahead of the supply, and then it would be time enough to build. Both S. S. Pennock and Arthur Niessen believed that good prices would be maintained throughout the coming season.

great struggle the past year under the labor handicap to get this stock together, but we feel amply repaid when we meet our old customers in being able to serve them with foliage and flowering plants that are up to, and I think even a little better, than our usual standard."

William Leonard, Landsdowne, Pa., is much pleased with the rose prices of the season so far, but said they should equal twice those of last year for the grower to come out right, for the reason that labor, coal, fertilizer, hauling, boxes, in fact, everything that has to do with the cost of production is 100 per cent higher than the prices of a year ago. He cut down his glass area one-half as requested by the government, but it is costing him only 25 per cent less to run this, than it did to carry on the whole place last year.

J. J. Habermel's Sons have been renovating their large show window at the Bellevue-Stratford store. The interior arrangement is after plans prepared by Walter Vanden Hengle. The large 10 x 20 foot plate glass was successfully reset. Business is reported good, rather quiet in the store, but the decorative department is gaining as the season advances.

A favorable factor is the improved service of the express companies, who now send out their cars to various establishments as often as desired. After the consolidation and the combined organizations began running smoothly, orders have gone through with but little delay and it is hoped that embargoes are a thing of the past.

The retail stores are experiencing the usual lull of early December and taking advantage of this opportunity to get up their baskets and other holiday stock. Pennock Brothers have added several women workers to their holiday force and find them quite expert in making up wreaths of evergreen and other like material.

H. I. Faust, of Merion, who specializes on cyclamen, thinks plants must be scarce all over the country, as he never had so many out-of-town visitors as this season. He had more cyclamen than ever before, and could have sold twice as many. Ferns also had a good sale.

Memorial services in honor of Corporal Raymond C. Choirs were held in Calvary Presbyterian Church, Camden, N. J. A gold star was placed in the service flag and there were a number of eulogies by members of the congregation by whom he was held in the highest esteem.

Jos. G. Neidinger is back in the harness again, assisting his hard-pressed manager with a record breaking holiday business. He says the stores must have sold out clean during the October rush, as all kinds of florists' supplies are in the greatest demand.

Leo, Niessen expresses the opinion that if the present demand and prices keep up, and he believes they will, that it means additional houses next year as he never knew a grower with a pocketful of money that did not put it into greenhouses.

Edward Reid is spending a few days gunning in North Carolina. His manager finds a good demand for the limited supply of stock now coming in. Maryland and Ophelia roses, good carnations and cattleyas are features.

Manager Miller, of the Philadelphia Wholesale Florists' Exchange, finds a light demand, but sufficient to take all their choice rose stock every day. Ophelia, Weiland and Ward are leading varieties, all of excellent quality.

Red chenille is being used very extensively in all holiday work in place of red immortelles, which are very scarce and high, bringing the record price of 60 cents per bunch. Red ruscus is also in great demand.

Leo Niessen, in speaking of market conditions, said the prices are now just about what they were five years ago, particularly in roses. Carnations are higher, but other stock, not much, if any, better than at that time.

The Jos. Heacock Co. worked up a good shipping trade but find the demand greater than they can supply. The business in palms and cut flowers of the past six months has broken all records.

Packing is being charged for by some growers as wooden cases, excelsior and heavy sheeting paper, together with labor and other charges, have added so materially to the cost of this service.

Nothing left over from one day to another is the condition with the Leo Niessen Co. American Beauty roses and choice carnations are quantity items. Cattleyas and cyripediums are also features.

Godfrey Aschman and Aschman Bros. both report all blooming stock sold out, also Jerusalem cherries, and a good run on all ferns and other foliage plants.

Charles Feast, of Baltimore, was in town last week and reports very good business but a great scarcity of flowering plants and cut flowers in that city.

W. K. Harris reports a great run on birds nest fern and plant combinations. They miss the Christmas azaleas, which were a specialty here.

The Christmas plant men all report a phenomenal business, most of them having no flowering stock to sell since the first of December.

Berger Bros. are handling boxwood and other Christmas greens in quantity. Easter lilies and good late chrysanthemums are quantity stocks.

Visitors: E. Bovey, Greenville, S. C.; John Paul, Cumberland, Md.; H. F. Littlefield, Worcester, Mass.; F. F. Leiple, F. G. Marche, Z. D. Blackstone and George C. Shaffer, Washington, D. C.; Charles Feast, Baltimore Md., and R. W. Evans and George H. Silver of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. K.

WENHAM, MASS.—Austin F. Tracy, father of B. Hammond Tracy, well-known gladiolus specialist of Cedar Acres, died December 4, age 83 years. The deceased was greatly interested in the gladiolus and his vegetable garden was a point of interest to many visitors. Two sons survive.

HIGH CHRISTMAS PRICES INDICATED.

The trend of prices during the past week was upward, and it seems inevitable that for the Christmas trade, high prices will prevail. Coal is to be had, such as it is, but the partial raising of the embargo came too late to help some of the growers who had already arranged to shut down part of their ranges, and in the matter of stock could not start up again so late in the season. In plants there seems to be a fair supply of heather, poinsettias, cyclamens, primroses and the berried plants, but the azaleas will be missed. There will probably be scattering lots of old stock on the market, but not enough to supply a normal demand. We have noticed that a number of growers have already made up combinations of the colored leaf plants, such as crotons and dracaenas, with ferns, and they are quite attractive. The demand for cut flowers during the past week was not heavy; it seldom is for the first weeks of December, but the light supply stiffened prices. Special tea roses of the varieties least sought after, range from $15 to $20 per 100; such varieties as Ophelia, Russell and Hadley, from $20 to $50 per 100. No. 2 roses are $6 and $8 per 100. Good Ward carnations bring $10 per 100, and there is no likelihood of a decline, but to the contrary all will go higher. There are good Princess of Wales violets on the market, and they sell well. But few violets are arriving from Rhinebeck, and it is stated that the crop will be off until Christmas.

December 9.—The supply of stock is very light and prices are firm. The weather is clear and mild, favorable to the growers.

NOTES.

At the opening session of the Association of National Advertisers, Incorporated, at the Waldorf-Astoria, December 4, S. Wilbur Carman said: "I believe that advertising is going to be a vital attribute of the new democracy that we are going to see in this country as well as in other countries. Mass opinion on all subjects from prohibition down to current fashions in baby carriages will be cultivated as it has never been cultivated before through the printed word."

There was a conference in the office of Secretary John Young, December 6, relating to the plant exclusion act recently signed by Secretary of Agriculture Houston, and which becomes effective June 1, 1919. There were present, J. D. Eisele, of H. A. Dreer, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa.; James McHutchison and C. B. Knickman of McHutchison & Co., New York; John Watson, Newark, N. Y., and President Totty and Secretary Young of the Society of American Florists.

Frank N. Doubleday, president of the publishing firm of Doubleday, Page & Co., was married, November 27, to Miss Florence Van Wyck of this city. The first Mrs. Doubleday, who was a writer, died in February of this year, in Canton, China, while on a trip with her husband in the interest of the Red Cross.

ports that their Thanksgiving business was good and they are well pleased with the outlook.

Mrs. Matthew Sampson, Jr., gave birth to a son, December 8, it being the first boy in the family, the other two children being girls. The entire family is happy, particularly Matthew Sampson, Jr.

James Taplin, who for some years has been foreman at the range of Henry Siebrecht, New Rochelle, N. Y., has resigned and, it is said, will engage in the automobile business.

Manager Edward McCarthy, of James Weir, Inc., 324 Fulton street, Brooklyn, advises us that their Thanksgiving business was excellent and that general trade continues active.

Hugo Jahn, the retailer of 710 North street, Brooklyn, reports good Thanksgiving business. His store is one of the most attractive in that borough.

Alfred Demeusy, the grower of Clarkson street, Flatbush, is cutting fine stock of his sport of the Enchantress carnation.

William A. Phillips, 272 Fulton street, Brooklyn, reports a "good Thanksgiving" and business holding up well.

Z. D. Blackstone, of Washington, D. C., was in town December 9. He reports a scarcity of stock in that city.

Joseph J. Levy, the wholesaler of 56 West 26th street, is handling very good stock of all the seasonal flowers.

The Henshaw Floral Co. is receiving fine stock of the golden and white Mistletoe chrysanthemums.

THANKSGIVING TRADE OF GREAT VOLUME.

The great volume of business done for Thanksgiving brought the month of November to a fine close, running a close second to October, which stands as a record breaker, and the best ever experienced, even by some of our pioneers. All predictions that stock of all kinds would be far short of the demand for this holiday came true with the exception of chrysanthemums, especially those cut in spray form. Stock in this particular line was held back for the rush, and as the weather was cool, they came through in good shape. The supply of the old standbys, namely, roses and carnations, was far short of requirements, consequently the chrysanthemums had easy sailing. The same can be said of the limited supply of stevia, calendulas, violets, sweet peas and snapdragons. With the Thanksgiving holiday, came numerous orders for table decorations and social affairs, and we have good reason to expect a gradual return of the use of flowers, other than that which has kept the retailers going since our entrance into the war. We regret to report that since November 28, the "flu," which apparently had abated, has again gained the upper hand the past week with a greatly increased death rate, which again created an extra heavy demand for funeral work, and anything in the form of a flower, no matter what color, shape or size, is being used. Conditions are more critical now than during the first siege, for at that time there were some chrysanthemums and plenty of outdoor weeds which helped out. At the present time, with the short days, indoor stock opens slow. Great quantities of artificial flowers, magnolia and galax leaves, oak and boxwood sprays and the like, are being substituted, and orders refused at that. From present indications, the high prices of cut flowers being realized now will not come down till after the new year. Greens of all kinds are getting scarce and prices going up. At this writing, the only flower that is plentiful is stevia.

CLUB OFFICERS ELECTED.

Although it was election night, December 5, the attendance at the club meeting was not as large as expected; and then there was nothing of special importance outside of the election to really make it worth while. The following officers will serve the coming year: Wm. A. Kennedy, president; Nic. Zweifel, vice-president; James Livingson, treasurer; Eugene Oestreicher, secretary; A. Reinhardt, trustee for three years.

NOTES.

Fred Manke, of North Milwaukee, says he has just closed a most successful season, having cut perennial delphenium from June 1 to Thanksgiving, something rather unusual in this vicinity. Large quantities of annual gypsophila also proved a paying proposition. His houses are now devoted to carnations, which are in prime condition.

Since December 2, there has been only one man on the job at the Fox Point Floral Co. at North Milwaukee. Even Hans and Otto, the proprietors, are down with the "flu." Another establishment handicapped by lack of help is the John Rost place; only a girl left to look after "the whole works."

At the C. C. Pollworth Co. it was a matter of being sold out early, with orders being cut all around. To avoid the "strain," C. C. took to the woods on his annual hunting trip and returned with a "dandy."

The Holton & Hunkel Co. was fortunate in having a nice lot of large chrysanthemums and a good cut of roses for Thanksgiving. They are now busy on their pot plants for the Christmas trade.

J. M. Fox & Son, Inc., who enjoyed a fine Thanksgiving trade, report an awakening in the demand for corsage and table bouquets, items practically dead with them for some time past.

Prospects are good for a large cut of fine carnations at the Greenwood Carnation Co., North Milwaukee, for the Christmas business. Their average cut to date has not been very great.

Having had considerable trouble of late in obtaining an adequate water supply, Kamp & Spinti are having a deep well drilled, which they hope will alleviate further anxiety.

Gust Rusch & Co. were at their wits' ends trying to divide up what came in between shipping and local orders, ever since the last week in November.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

MILFORD, CONN.—Arthur B. Clark is president of the Milford Trust Co.

It is reported Japanese toy shipments are coming now. If so, why not lily bulbs?

OWENSBORO, KY.—Field & Co. are building a spacious new warehouse of steel and concrete.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE, Chicago, reports brisk demand for many scarce items in flower seeds.

ONION SETS in the Chicago district show little change with colors at $2.00 and whites $2.75 to $3.00, January delivery.

JANESVILLE, WIS.—A new farm tractor establishment covering 125 acres has been started here by the General Motors Co.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade December 11 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.75 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

The British government permitted Canada to import Japanese lily bulbs of the 1918 crop and it is understood these are being distributed to dominion dealers and growers.

COLUMBUS, O.—The large greenhouses of the Livingston Seed Co. in which cut flower growing has been discontinued for the winter, are now being utilized for drying seed corn.

BRISTOL, PA.—The D. Landreth Seed Co. extends an invitation to inspect its new garden seed warehouse any afternoon except Saturdays and Sundays between the hours of 2 and 5 o'clock.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover closed 10 cents higher December 10 at $24.60, a drop of 70 cents during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents higher, selling at $5.05; December, $5.05; January, $5.10 and May $5.32.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Proposals are being invited by the General Supply Committee to be opened December 31 for the supply of seeds for the use of the government departments in Washington and various field services, deliveries to run from January 1 to June 30, 1919.

H. G. HASTINGS, of H. G. Hastings & Co., Atlanta, Ga., who was in Chicago this week, reports his firm's spring catalogue is on the press to be ready for mailing Christmas day. Mr. Hastings says he will be glad to retail some kinds of seed the coming season at prices to cover contract costs.

THE United States contains about 1,500,000,000 acres of land of which 1-140,000,000, or 60 per cent, is tillable. Approximately 337,000,000 acres, or 32 per cent, was planted to crops in 1918. The department of agriculture estimates that in 30 years from 1880 to 1910 the number of farms in the United States increased from 4,000,000 to 6,362,000.

Holly and Green.

The bouquet green supply was short this week at Chicago because of eight to 10 days' delay in car movements. Ten dollars per 100 pounds is asked, with little available.

The holly situation compares with that of ground pine except that the supply is even shorter at this date, December 11.

New Jersey Seed Crops.

George R. Pedrick & Son, Pedricktown, are filling orders in full on tomato, pepper, egg plant, watermelon, squash, pumpkin gourds, asparagus and okra and are finishing up crops of squash and pumpkin. In muskmelon and cucumber there is a little shortage in some varieties. Altogether the crops have been very good this year.

Corn Seed.

While they will have no large crop of seed corn C. S. Clark & Son, Wake-man, O., report the yield sound, well matured, of fine quality and very strong germination, from which they hope to fill from 70 to 100 per cent of orders on sweet varieties. The crop of Black Mexican has been nearly ruined by chinch bugs with only 20 to 30 per cent of this sort in sight. Country Gentleman is also short with a yield of 60 to 70 per cent. Dent and flint are both well matured, but the acreage is not large.

Breck Benefit Association Meeting.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the mutual benefit association of the employees of Joseph Breck & Sons Corporation, Boston, Mass., was held in the salesroom at the close of business, November 19. The report of the treasurer showed a substantial balance in spite of the fact that the benefits paid during the year were greatly in excess of any since the organization was founded. This balance has been partly invested in Liberty bonds and war saving stamps.

The secretary's report showed 22 members and fellow-workers "over there". During their absence they are retained as members and their dues remitted. They have also been remembered from time to time with comforts by the welfare committee. One member, Charles E. Simonds, of the 16th Company, C. A. C. artillery, died from disease.

The president briefly addressed the meeting and thanked the executive committee for its hearty support and co-operation during the year.

The following is the list of officers re-elected for the ensuing year: A. J. M. Joiner, president; F. S. Ferreira, vice-president; H. L. Haines, treasurer; Miss H. L. Riley, secretary. Executive committee: Mrs. A. Coombs, Miss M. C. Cushing, S. L. Hatch, A. E. Werner and W. F. Wilson.

Forage Plant Seed Imports.

The following table prepared in the seed laboratory of the bureau of plant industry, United States department of agriculture, shows the amount of the various kinds of forage plant seeds subject to the seed importation act permitted entry into the United States during the month of November, 1917, as compared with November, 1918:

Sweet Corn Resistant to Earworm.

An effort is being made to increase the supply of seed of the variety of sweet corn announced in last year's report and determine its range of adaptability according to the bureau of plant industry of the United States department of agriculture. The early-maturing strains have been isolated for the northern part of the region infested by the earworm.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, December 10.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $2.50 to $5.50; celery, crate, 90 cents to $1.25; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.00 to $2.00; radishes, per dozen bunches, 35 to 40 cents; tomatoes, per lug, $3.00 to $3.50.

New York, December 9.—Celery (state per bunch 40 to 70 cents; cucumbers, $2.50 to $5.00 per dozen; mushrooms, $1.00 to $1.85 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 12 to 25 cents; lettuce, per package, 40 cents to $3.00; radishes, per 100 bunches, $2.50 to $3.00.

Rust-Resistant Asparagus.

As a result of the substitution of resistant asparagus for the susceptible strains previously grown, the rust is rapidly being eliminated according to the bureau of plant industry of the United States department of agriculture. The distribution of the improved strains has been extended to every asparagus growing section of the country, including many commercial seed growers and state experiment stations. Early and late strains to suit different growers who wish to meet different market conditions have been developed.

Potatoes at New York.

Potatoes have been piling up on the piers and at the railroad yards for the last three weeks. They have been offered at from $3.75 to $4 a bag (165 pounds), which is nearly $2 less than it cost the farmer to produce them, according to P. Q. Foy, the market reporter. "If one buys a bag of potatoes in the wholesale market and has them expressed to his home in New York city," Mr. Foy said, "it will cost him from 50 cents to $1 for delivery. The freight charges on a 150 pound bag of potatoes from New York state to this city is from 24 to 29 cents. The average freight charges on a 165 pound bag Michigan to this city is $1. From Maine the freight charges on a 165 pound bag, are from 66 to 68 cents. If something could be done by the food administration or other federal activities to bring about a decrease in delivery charges within the city, it is possible that more people might be induced to buy potatoes in comparatively large quantities for home consumption. Potato stocks would be cleaned up more readily, and a wholesale price might be obtained that would make it more worth while for a farmer to raise potatoes. The farmer had to pay this year from 200 to 300 per cent more for his fertilizer than he paid last year. Labor was hardly obtainable at any price. Seed potatoes were higher this year than ever before. If the farmer had thought that he was going to get such prices as he is now getting for his potatoes he would not have raised them. While potatoes have been wholesaling at $2 to $2.50 for 100 pounds for Maine, $2 to $2.10 for state and $2.40 to $2.90 for Long Island, the retailer has been getting from $4 to $6 for 100 pounds, or at the rate of from four to six cents a pound from consumers."

The foregoing is from the New York Sun of November 23. Reports have been coming in from country sections of low prices being paid for other vegetables, yet the people of the great city of New York seem to be at the mercy of bands of profiteers who squeeze them both coming and going. The restaurants buy wholesale, but no man that eats in a restaurant would suppose from the homeopathic portions of potatoes served by most of them, that they were plentiful and cheap. The food administration seems to have made elaborate arrangements for feeding everybody but the American people.

A. F. F.

Vegetable Markets.

The movement of all important items showed an increase over the preceding week, according to reports received by the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, for the period December 3-9. Prices were also higher. Most potato markets were quoted higher, securing the first fairly general advance since October. Prices were: Michigan and Wisconsin No. 1 white sacked stock, $1.75-$1.85 in carlots at Chicago; New York round whites, $1.88-$1.90 per 100 pounds and $2.10-$2.25 in consuming markets; Maine Green Mountains, $3-$3.15 per barrel. The trend of cabbage prices continued upward. New York Danish seed advanced $4, reaching $22-$26 in bulk f. o. b. Wisconsin Holland seed sold at $13 in bulk to growers in shipping sections. Colorado stock was weaker. Onions continued nearly steady. Prices were as follows: California Australian Browns, $1.25-$1.50 per 100 pounds sacked at Stockton; choice yellow, $1.50-$1.60 at New York and New England shipping sections; eastern and middle west sacked yellows, $1.50-$2 per 100 pounds. The celery market was strong with increased shipments. Lettuce values gained, there being advances in most consuming markets.

Chinch Bugs.

As an aid in saving the 1919 corn crop, the agricultural extension service of the College of Agriculture, Columbia, Mo., urges that bunch grass, litter, weeds and trash near old corn fields, which are the winter quarters of chinch bugs, be burned. Such action in the fall or early winter is about twice as effective as in the spring, as it exposes the bugs to the severity of winter weather and burning does not materially injure meadows or pastures. Further information will be supplied by the College of Agriculture upon request.

LANCASTER, O.—M. M. Miesse has leased his range to Andrew Wood and Ley Schull, who have the establishment going in fine shape. Mr. Miesse is now devoting his time to his coal business and reports no difficulty in meeting all requirements of his customers.

The Nursery Trade

American Association of Nurserymen.

J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., President; J. Edward Meen, Morrisville, Pa., Vice-President; Curtis Nye Smith, 19 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Secretary and Counsel. Forty-four annual convention will be held at Chicago in 1919.

ROYAL, B. C.—The Point Grey Nurseries have purchased the Royal Nurseries and incorporated with a capital of $10,000.

NURS ... Co., of this city, has 10,000 crape myrtle plants which will be sold practically at cost for planting in Houston in the campaign to make that the "crape myrtle city."

Chestnut Blight.

According to reports of the bureau of plant industry of the United States department of agriculture, several American chestnut trees have been located which are apparently highly resistant to the chestnut blight. This gives a promise of obtaining, by selection and propagation, a strain of American chestnuts which can be used for reforestation. Hitherto resistance has been found only in oriental species, which, while suitable for nut production, are too small for timber uses.

Trees Memorial to Soldier Dead.

A nation-wide movement has been started by the American Forestry Association for the planting of memorial trees for the soldier dead. Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the association, has written to every governor asking co-operation. The plan is to have each state plant memorial trees along the great trans-continental motor highways. P. S. Ridsdale, secretary of the association, says many towns and cities have taken up the idea and the General Federation of Women's Clubs is considering a similar plan for the Lincoln highway to be carried out by the state organizations.

"Nothing could be more appropriate," says Mr. Pack, "than to have each state, through which a motor highway passes, plant 'victory oaks' or 'victory elms' or other trees for her soldiers who have died in battle. The motor has played a mighty part in winning the war. Wood has played a big part in victory too. Our stocks must be replenished. With each state co-operating with the highway authorities a living age long lesson could be taught the coming generations as to the beauties and value of forestry."

Logan Blackberry Industry.

The Logan blackberry or Loganberry, formerly thought to be a hybrid of a blackberry and red raspberry, is now considered a variety of the Pacific coast species of the trailing blackberry, according to Farmers' Bulletin 1958, recently published by the United States department of agriculture. It is adapted to the milder parts of California, Oregon and Washington, where the temperature does not reach zero, and while the plant may survive in some sections of the south, it does not fruit well. Loganberries and related varieties will thrive on any well-drained, deep, fertile soil, but the crops will be largest on the richest ground, and it will pay well to have the soil in good condition before the plants are set. Between one and two tons of fruit can be expected from one-year-old plantations, but when well established, this should range from four to five tons per acre. Some plantations in Oregon have been known to remain nearly 20 years, but in California they do not usually continue profitable longer than six or seven years.

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

Love of Trees.

One day, as usual, we took a walk to the neighboring temple. Suddenly Hearn exclaimed, "Oh! Oh!" I did not know what had happened, and was frightened. Then I saw that three large cedar trees had been cut down, and Hearn was gazing at them. "Why did they cut down those trees?"

"This temple must be very poor, and they must need some money," I replied.

"Why didn't they tell me about it? I can easily give a little money to help them. I should have been happier to have given them some money and saved the trees. Think how long a time was necessary for those trees to grow from little sprouting seeds!" He was very down-hearted. "I begin to dislike that abbot. I am sorry for him because he has no money, but I am more sorry for those trees, Mamma-sion!"—From Reminiscences of Lafcadio Hearn.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.—Fred Reynolds, formerly with Julius, The Florist, is planning to open a flower shop shortly.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The state horticultural society, which was to have met at the West Hotel, December 4, has postponed its sessions until December 20-January 4, on which dates the university farm will be used for the meeting.

Omaha, Neb.

SUPPLY EXHAUSTED EARLY.

The demand for flowers in this city for Thanksgiving was exceptionally heavy, so much so, in fact, that many of the retailers and also wholesalers were sold out before the day was over and in several instances before it was well started, partly due to the fact that many stocks were low before the big call began. The number of deaths from influenza during the past two months created such a demand that the supply was much shortened, compelling cutting of chrysanthemums before they should have been brought in. One local grower had 30,000 blooms, but had disposed of all of them before Thanksgiving day dawned, many being shipped to outside points. Due to a number of houses in the Chicago district being closed, the call throughout the state of Iowa was so great that ranges in this city and Council Bluffs were soon depleted.

NOTE.

Ranges in this vicinity are being operated to full capacity instead of a number being closed down as was contemplated during the early part of the summer, following the 50 per cent coal restriction order. Fuel is more abundant now and growers are to secure all they need.

No More Soot Troubles

Z-I-N-C-O WHAT IT IS

Soot Destroyer is a harmless combination of chemicals. When this powder is spread lightly over a good hot fire the gas fumes resulting turn the soot into a light ash easily carried off by the draft, reaches places never touched by the operation of cleaning. It follows the draft and burns the soot thoroughly, prevents the discharge of large volumes of soot into the atmosphere, to cause complaints and become a criminal nuisance to yourself and your neighbors. It is very inexpensive to buy—simple and easy to use. The average cost per week is but a few cents. It is a fine flue saver as boiler surfaces are always exposed to the heating units. A clean boiler steams very easily and is a great labor saver. It does an A-1 job, without any effort on your part. All the largest plants in 41 states. Join these up-to-the-minute types of boilers—all types of stokers—and all kinds of

"Ain't it a Grand and Glorious Feeling?"

WHAT IT DOES

Z-I-N-C-O

Soot Destroyer will put pep into your boilers—make them deliver. It will keep them young and make old boilers heat like new. It will reduce ash and dirt. It will increase your draft.

WHAT IT DOES

Z-I-N-C-O

It destroys the worst cases of soot and soot scale, increases the efficiency of your boilers with less fuel, does this work quickly—easily and cheaply. Does all this for a few cents per week—with no extras.

Note The makers of Z-I-N-C-O have agreed to supply us with a number of small packages of this unusual article. The quantity is limited. The price is $3.00. If you have soot troubles, order one at once.

At the "House of Flowers," they had good Thanksgiving business, though rain on Thanksgiving day somewhat marred the occasion. This store is large, well stocked and admirably equipped for business.

"The Woman Florist," Mrs. Heater, said that business had been much better than last year.

At all points visited it was agreed that there was no scarcity of stock.

HOLIDAY SUGGESTIONS

Systematic Preparation Pays.

In the large department stores, they have, particularly at this season, a great rush of customers every day who are all handled apparently without the least friction. This is because everywhere, in each department, there is system and orderly methods in management.

To plan out and systematize the business in the flower shop, to have each department in competent hands, all ready to handle a capacity demand, waiting for the rush, is well worth the most diligent effort. Extra help, mostly women, can be obtained, and in a day or two taught details, that, with the attention of the older employees, makes them of great service.

A stock of crepe paper pot covers to fit various sized pots, made up by uniting the edges together on a sewing machine, saves a lot of time and makes a better job than when the paper is tied on by hand. These will keep indefinitely and are always useful.

As there are always a number of out-of-town shipping orders, crated boxes should be made ready with plenty of corrugated lining paper. To have to prepare a box of this character at the rush time out of odds and ends of lumber is tedious and unsatisfactory work.

Tags and tag envelopes should all be strung or wired in sufficient quantity to last over the busy time. There must also be a good supply of news, wrapping, wax and tissue papers.

All stock, particularly in the Christmas greens, should be delivered to the store as far as possible in salable condition. It is an advantage to deal directly with the men who gather the holly and make up the wreaths and crosses. Retailers who manage their business with system know from their last year's records just about how much of this stock they will require. It is a great help to have the holly put up in the woods in bunches, 10, 20 or 30 to a case. It is quickly handled when the rush comes, sold only in the bunch, and there is no waste.

Holly wreaths of the various sizes are packed in separate cases with layers of papers between. The larger sizes carry best in barrels, packed so as to retain their form without crushing one another. No trash in any of the Christmas greens should be allowed in the store. Each piece should be well made and salable; it will bring the extra money and there is no left overs or waste. There is no time to make up holly pieces at the shop; it eats up too much energy. Ground pine and nursery evergreen wreaths are best made at the store, particularly the fancy stock, which takes the trained hand to execute properly. The material for these should be early on hand so as to have the entire quota finished before December 20.

As far as possible, all decorated Japanese chenille wreaths should be finished with their ribbons and packed in boxes to be instantly at hand to replenish stocks as sold. Certain sized wreaths require the same bows of red ribbon, which should be made up in advance, packed away, and then require but a moment to adjust.

A sprig or two of holly on a pine branch with cones, makes a good finish to the outside of any tied up box or package for Christmas week.

Baskets and Pans.

Plant baskets and pans that fit low covers are now very nicely and quite artistically filled by growers, some of whom make a specialty of this work. Many artists, however, prefer to do this filling themselves in the store, which generally entails much slavish all night work.* Wherever possible, it is much better done the week before in the greenhouse of a friendly grower, the various stocks being sent here instead of to the store and under his care when arranged. After a day or two the plants become straightened out and present a much better appearance than when freshly filled at the store. They are then delivered daily as required.

The little tumbler or small vase baskets, gilded and filled with evergreen branches, cones, red ruscus and sprays of holly, with a bow of red ribbon on the handle, will be just what many buyers are looking for. Shop-worn baskets, gilded, will look as good as new for this filling.

A careful watch must be kept to see that plants, pans or plant baskets, do not suffer for water, and particularly before they are wrapped for delivery. When received at the home, they are not watered immediately, and if dry, a night in a warm room will mean a phone call the next morning, that "the plant has been frozen in delivery, call for it and send another."

Other Good Offerings.

Medium sized sprays or branches of nursery evergreens and boxwood, with holly, cones, and a little red ruscus, tied with a red ribbon, will sell readily to be sent as Christmas greetings.

Ground pine or lycopodium wreathing, tied in coils of 10 yards each, will, if suggested to customers, as good for decorating chandeliers or over picture frames, find many purchasers.

Miniature or small spruce trees in six to eight-inch pots, with or without roots, can be decorated with small bunches of red immortelles wired to the ends of the branches. These, with a bow of red ribbon on the green cover of the pot, make showy centerpieces for the Christmas dinner or gift tables.

Loose mistletoe should be made into bunches, tied to small boughs or knotty tree branches, and decorated with red bows. The red ribbon on small bunches of loose sprays, makes them much more attractive and salable. Covers of wax paper about the bunches will save the berries and help their appearance.

With all these items of preparedness complete before December 20, there is a great sense of satisfaction and feeling of security, that no matter how great the rush, the store is ready for whatever comes. Time that was formerly spent in trying to catch up with the orders, is now used to keep and display the stock to the best advantage and make the store, if possible, more inviting.

HARTFORD, CONN.—A. F. Lindner has leased the Cedar Hill Greenhouses from E. S. Drake.

HARTFORD, CONN.—John P. Quinn, well known to this trade in the city, died December 7, age 40 years.

BRAMPTON, ONT.—Following a recent ruling of the court, the Dale estate has recovered the William Fendley property, which will be added to the Dale glass area.

Cold Storage Dagger and Fancy Ferns.

During January, and from then on until the new crop appears on the market, many cases of ferns opened from cold storage are found to be considerably damaged, the fronds or leaves being more or less brown or black from a quarter to half, generally from the bottom up, and in many instances entire bunches are found so rotted as to be of no value. Going over these cases is a task, as to do the work thoroughly, each bunch has to be untied and tested, frequently there being only enough good left from two bunches to make one.

Charles E. Meehan, of the S. S. Pen-nock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia, Pa., says that the loss and inconvenience from having to handle such damaged stock is considerable. He believes that it is caused by the ferns being put into cold storage in the original cases as soon as received from the woods. This is a mistake, as they are sometimes several days on the road, and such fresh plant matter, packed closely together, is very apt to generate heat and moisture. While it would be quite a little trouble, the cases, on arrival, should be, for the most part, unpacked in the storage house and remain so until each bunch was chilled and all the natural or generated heat taken out; then, when repacked, the chances are that no fermentation or generation of gas would occur and they would remain in good condition the season through.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

The next few days will see the culmination of months of preparation. Everything has been done and a system marked out to handle the enormous volume of business incidental to this season in the short time that the nature of the perishable stock will permit. Almost all other lines of trade have their Christmas business well under way immediately after Thanksgiving, extending over a period of nearly a month, while almost the entire demand in the flower shop is covered in one week's time, two thirds of it in the last three days.

The store that is best supplied with stock, ready to be sold without further preparation, and an economical system of handling and delivery, will be able to dispose of twice the stock and with less friction than the too often seen, behind-hand organization, who struggle along to catch up with work that nearly overwhelms them.

Sunday coming on December 22, gives an opportunity to catch up, arrange the plant baskets, flowering and foliage stock, so as to display it to the best advantage, attach ribbons and give other salable touches to the choice show baskets and specimen plants.

Cemetery wreaths can be selected, particularly all those that do not require fresh flowers. Boxed and tagged, they are out of the way and ready for quick handling at delivery time. Addresses to those in the cities of the dead should be very explicit. All cemeteries have plans on which the sections and lots are numbered. All these should be on file. The names of all "regulars" should be written down, together with section and lot number. Initials are important, as so many families have the same name, as Smith, Brown, etc. Ofttimes even the entire names are alike, and then lot numbers are vitally necessary. The cemetery orders should play an important part in the business of this year on account of the many deaths due to the recent epidemic.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY DINNER OF WHOLESALE CUT FLOWER PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION AT NEW YORK, DEC. 14, 1918.

All kinds of Christmas greens, decorative wreaths, etc., can be selected as far as the orders have come in and tied up ready for delivery. If placed cool, they will keep in good condition.

Look over the cut flower orders so far received. This will give some idea of how this demand is looming up. It will not be safe to hold off very long in ordering cut flower stock this season. Certain standard items had better be secured before the last day or there may be expensive disappointments.

Prices are to be higher than ever before and this must not be overlooked when orders are taken. There should be a generous profit on all of this perishable stock, otherwise there will be nothing left over for all the hard work and anxiety incident to this time.

Quick handling of trade is necessary during the rush period of the last three days. Order slips, with customer's card (if any) attached, should be turned into the office as soon as taken, and the next waiting person attended to.

Orders should be written down so that they can be filled by any competent person. Important items are: day, date and time of delivery, quantity, color of flower and price, charge, or paid and card. While this is generally noted automatically on printed spaces of the sheet, yet omissions will occur and are to be at once noted and corrected in the office, whose business it is to see that the order is complete before being filed.

Cards to go with orders for cut flowers should be, in addition to the card envelope, also enclosed in another of wax paper. This is to be placed among or on top of the flowers in the box before the paper lining is folded over. Frequently, the card if placed on top of the lining paper, after being closed over the flowers, slips down the side of the box during delivery, is not seen when opened, and at times causes a lot of trouble.

Where every foot of store space counts, temporary shelving can be built on pipe or other slender supports, about six feet from the floor, over counters. This is useful on which to place, temporarily, stock that has been selected or sold, getting it quickly out of the way.

A "will call" shelf for selected plants for which cards are to be sent later, so they can be at once found, is a great help, when every minute counts.

It is one man's job to look after the watering, as no plant or basket should be allowed to go out the least bit dry. Over night in a hot room spells disaster for the flowering plant that is not prepared to stand it, and a demand that the "frozen" plant be made good generally follows. The same attendant can also rearrange unsold stock and keep the groups in order.

Very few cut flowers need be exposed in the case; just a few vases of roses or carnations, the balance of the space to contain well arranged vases of poinsettias or callas.

A sample box of flowers, nicely arranged, to sell for $5 or more, according to the trade of the store, can also be displayed in the case. This will help undecided customers, and permit the use of a variety of flowers in stock. Made up corsages of orchids, violets, or sweet peas, finished with ribbons, as samples, also bring quick decisions and a better price than when the same flowers are bargained for by the bunch.

New York Wholesalers' Banquet.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY DINNER.

Forefathers' day, the tenth anniversary of the above named association, was celebrated with a dinner at the Hotel Breslin, New York, on the night of December 14. A majority of the members and a number of invited guests were seated at the sumptuous board, and the occasion was enlivened by good instrumental music, and Miss Lea Lealand and William Logan, vocal artists.

President Frank H. Traendly, of the association, acted as toastmaster, and introduced the speakers with wise and witty remarks, for which he is noted. Walter F. Sheridan was first called on. He reviewed the history of the association and its aims. Wallace R. Pierson paid his compliments to the association, detailed the futile efforts made by growers and wholesalers of the east to organize for the purpose of standardizing credits, and went on to describe the condition of the growing establishments, and its effect on production. He related the closing down of many small ranges, the shutting down of part of the houses in the larger ones and gave as his opinion that a reduced production might be expected, not only for this season, but also for the following year or two. He added that the very large increase in overhead charges meant that higher prices must henceforth prevail, and that the flower buying public must be educated to pay more money for flowers. George B. Hart followed, speaking in a similar vein. Other speakers were Ward B. Smith, secretary and manager of the association, who told of its work during the past year; William P. Ford, Philip F. Kessler, W. G. Badgley, E. C. Horan, Percy B. Rigby, Charles Schenck and H. E. Froment, all members of the association, and all made appropriate remarks. Paul Rigo read interesting letters from him soldier brother, Alphonse, now in France, and who has been through bitter fighting, but fortunately has come out unharmed.

The trade press was represented by A. T. De La Mare, and A. F. Faulkner, of THE AMERICAN FLORIST. The former paid his respects to the association in a few well chosen remarks; the latter said he was pleased to be present, and told a story. The table decorations were cleverly arranged by Alfred H. Langjahr.

Stevia.

One of the staple flowers for the late fall, continuing until after January 1, or over the holidays, is stevia. Its pleasing fragrance and light, graceful sprays, combined with its neutral color, make its use possible in combination with all other flowers. In fact, no cut flower stock is complete without a jar or two of bunches of stevia.

There is quality in stevia as in other flowers. Much of it is seen that is soft and spindly, being grown in too much heat, or cut from plants that lacked stamina, as only good, heavy, stocky plants that are grown cold, will produce the stout stemmed, heavy flowered sprays, that are so much admired.

To grow stevia to perfection, it must be treated as a crop, and grown as are other standard stocks, on time with each successive stage, from the cutting bed until it is housed in the fall.

The Floracraft Nurseries at Moorestown, N. J., are sending in about the best stock that comes to the Philadelphia market. Superintendent Ross states that good, strong plants from 2½-inch pots are transplanted into fours in June and plunged, or rather planted, pot and all, outside, where they receive, during the summer, all the water necessary, from an overhead system of pipes. They are pinched three times, so as to get a good base with as many strong stems as possible. The last of September they are lifted and potted in six-inch pots. They are kept in the fours during the summer, making a solid ball of roots, and although they push through the hole in the bottom, yet disturbing these does not affect the plant, and they soon take hold of the new soil, which, by the way, is a good, well-rotted compost, enriched with plenty of cow manure. The plants are then placed close together on the earth floor in a low, sash house, 12 feet in width, on which the sash are not placed until there is danger of frost. The house, when covered, is kept well ventilated to retard the growth as much as possible. The temperature does not get above 50° at night. The plants net, when cut, a trifle over 50 cents each, as two plants make three bunches, which sell at 35 cents each.

On December 13, the house was about half cut out. The growth is straight and even all over, requiring a mass of bloom from to either side of the house. The plants are nearly four feet in height.

Mr. Ross speaks highly of the overhead watering system for outside florists' crops. With this installed, there are no protracted spells of dry weather, which are often so injurious to growing plants during the periods of extreme heat, so often experienced during July and August. He finds this watering system very beneficial to hydrangeas when making their summer growth.

Snapdragon the Year Round.

The antirrhinum, which has in the past few years become one of the standard winter-forcing cut flowers, can be grown to advantage all the year round. The young plants raised from seed set out in the open ground in May, after danger of frost, will soon attain a good size and produce flowers with fair length of stems from early July. By fall the plants, particularly if they have been made independent of the weather by irrigation, will attain a good, stocky growth. Before danger of frost, they are cut back to within six inches of the ground, lifted, and planted on raised benches in the house. They are staked the same as carnations, with several tiers or racks of strings across the beds added as the shoots increase in height. The growth on the plants when brought in does not amount to much, all the flowers bearing shoots breaking from the bottom as the plants take hold in their new location. Grown in this way they are a good crop to follow a house of summer asters, there being a fair showing of flowers about the time chrysanthemums are cut out, which will continue throughout the entire winter season.

THE ROSE.

Planning for 1919.

The prospects of a heavy cut for Christmas is rather doubtful this year, and those who profited by the unfortunate epidemic that played such havoc a few weeks ago, can in many instances skip the holiday sales and still feel grateful for the magnificent returns caused by the greatest demand for flowers, we believe, this country has ever known.

Of course, the plants that were cut from at that time ordinarily would have been pinched for a holiday crop, and we have beds at present that resemble a closely cropped hedge, with the exception that the hedge would be carrying much more foliage, and we presume there are many growers that have their plants, or many of them, in the same condition, which, by the way, is not a good condition for a quick return of vigorous growth, and where the plants have been hit unusually hard, they will recover very slowly, as at this time the vitality of the indoor roses is at a low ebb, so a little intelligence, directed right will have to be used from now on to overcome this severe check. We are withholding the water about 50 per cent and syringing daily, weather permitting. In fact, the extra heavy syringing, if done often enough, will be nearly all the water the plants will require, unless extremely cold weather sets in, demanding an unusual amount of radiation, which may dry out the beds more rapidly. At the same time, the soil should be kept moist, and never allowed to become dry, as this would have a tendency to ripen the wood, a thing to be avoided.

CHRISTMAS BASKET.

Renew Evergreens, Cones, Red and White Ruscus, Holly, Etc.

All buds and blind growths should be pinched for a time, or until the plants have regained foliage and show a tendency to come back strong, then they should be encouraged by applying a fairly good mulch of cow manure (fresh manure should be used here) and washed in well with the hose. It would be a safe plan to carry a small amount of ventilation (half an inch will suffice) at night if any great amount of ammonia is released from the fresh manure, otherwise the most tender foliage may become burned. The first mulch need not be a heavy one, in fact, a big handful to each plant will do; rather, what one can take with both hands is what is meant. Then, if the plants respond quickly to the feed, slap the water to them and come back again in three or four weeks with another mulch, much heavier. This should bring good cutting about the latter part of February or the first of March, and perhaps many of the growths, when they do come, can be pinched for Easter, which comes April 20 in 1919. Of course these suggestions are meant for plants that have literally been stripped by cutting every flower, long and short, to the extent of extreme checking, and as we have had numerous inquiries as to whether these plants should be dried off entirely, repruned and started later, we suggest the above treatment. In fact, our plants, Ophelia in particular, are responding slowly, but we hope surely, to this treatment, Ophelia, with us, being rather slow to come back always after a heavy Christmas cut. This can be helped wonderfully by taking off a few buds, or pinching every few days through the fall months, in order to break up a crop. And we find that if the cut covers a long period, say a fair cut from them daily, the check is hardly noticeable during the extreme cold weather and mid-winter dull days. This applies to many of our plants. Shawyer being another variety that we treat in practically the same manner.

A few days yet remain before cutting the holiday blooms, and everything to encourage a fine finish to the stock should be used. For good, crisp, nicely colored stock, do not run the houses stuffy and hot; 58° to 60° will be right if the timing of the crop is right, and if the cut is going to be late, do not break down the vitality of the plants by over-forcing, as it surely does not pay in the long run, and in all probability any good stock will bring fair returns at any time this winter. Poor stock can be seen "On the street" any time. Remember to have everything in readiness to take care of the cut; a good, clean, well-ventilated cellar that can be kept at a temperature of from 40° to 45°, will be found the ideal place for the cut stock of course. The crocks should be kept scrupulously clean at all times, and should be scalded and aired once a week, and in order to do this, one will require a liberal supply of jars, but it will be money well spent, and with plenty of them around, there need be no crowding. Never place more flowers in a jar than will settle down quite easily without squeezing, and never keep more than one or two days' cut back in order to make a "killing" at the last minute of the high prices. Keep the stock just long enough so that the commission man will receive it in the very best condition possible. You would not expect to pay much for a faded out, flabby lot of flowers that would go to pieces as soon as they were exposed to the heat of the ordinary living room of a dwelling or the hospitals. The public do not buy flowers to keep in an ice box, so see to it, Mr. Grower, that they are fresh and crisp, and then do not be ashamed or backward about charging enough (if a retailer) to come out with a fair profit and be just as careful not to overdo the charging stunt for the good of future business.

Well, how has "Columbia" done for you? So far, from all that we can see and hear, it is "some rose," and it is now time for the grower to look over his range carefully, to see just what he intends discarding and what he is going to replace with, etc., a kind of taking account of stock so to speak. If you have been wise you will know what is paying and what is not, for it should be just a matter of looking over a carefully kept record of the daily cut from each variety. All up to date growers can not afford to guess at anything, and those that are not making a special effort to keep at the front, should at least from now on, get down to "brass tacks" and keep a daily record of the returns of the commission house, which if balanced in a special book used for this purpose only, every week, one can, at a glance, in looking through his record ledger, know what's what.

"Premier," the latest addition to the rose family for 1919, sure looks good and in all probability will be quite extensively grown next year. It looks good to us, and although I would not suggest doing away with Russell, by those that are doing Russell well, I would suggest a fair trial of any meritorious variety as a comparison to something it closely resembles, and in some cases, as with Premier, for instance, I think the latter will be a better doer but this has yet to be proved to the majority. I have not the smallest "axe to grind," so these suggestions are merely to assist along certain lines where they will do the most good.

E.

Rose Growing Wrinkles.

Rose growers who have installed the overhead pipe system of watering in their ranges find it to be practical, economical and a great labor saver. A gas engine or electric motor drives the pump which gives the necessary pressure where this is lacking so that a large area may be watered at one time. The water that falls on the walks is soon absorbed or passes off, the condition not being as bad as when the hose is used.

The beds should be well soaked before giving a mulch of fresh manure, which should also immediately have a good watering. Applying fresh manure to one bed a day in a large house is good practice, the ammonia from each bed being absorbed before the next mulch throws off an additional charge.

Grafted roses will give 20 per cent better returns the first year than own-root stock. The difference is also noticeable in some varieties well into the second year, but after that it is difficult to-tell them apart. Many roses are planted 12 inches apart in the rows and 14 to 15 inches between. A new establishment, doing things on a large scale, has planted its stock 12 inches each way and secures a 20 per cent increase in the cut over the 12x15 way. They are now in the second year and are keeping up the ratio.

Hadley, with some growers, does not appear happy until the spring months, when it is a great producer. With others, it seems almost like another variety in growth and productiveness during the fall and winter. Good soil and plenty of drainage with liberal dressings of cow manure are said to be necessary. Increased temperatures are not necessary as one of the successes is attained at a night condition of 56 degrees.

Sunburst in certain localities is said to have gone back and growers are replanting with other or newer sorts. One practical man suggests that the cultural methods are at fault and that the variety is as good as ever is evidenced by this season's cut up to November 1, which paid him 35 cents per plant.

In order to get good, strong wood for cuttings, the bud should be pinched from strong shoots, which will then fill out, and when fairly mature, can be made into cuttings of which a large percentage is certain to root and make strong, vigorous plants. Very good results have been obtained with Russell which has been found hard to propagate, by this method.

A night temperature of 56 degrees has been found best for nearly all forcing roses, a successful grower claiming to have better results both in quality and quantity than at 58 to 60 degrees.

Rose Fete at Bourges.

The annual rose fete of the French Society of Rose Cultivators held June 16, 1918, took on the color of a great Franco-American day on which considerable funds were realized for the various war relief bureaus under the protection of the public subscription committee of the American Red Cross. The affair was a great success. Beginning with the exhibition of roses in the garden of the Hotel de Ville, which edifice was designed by Le Notre under Louis XIV, the day closed with a kermess. The receipts were in the neighborhood of $2,000.—Revue Horticole.

THE CARNATION.

Seasonable Attention.

Closest attention should be given to the many details in the routine care of the plants. They have before them for the next ten weeks, the most trying period of their existence, when the growth is at its lowest vitality, needing a most careful watching to encourage the plants to keep up a steady productiveness. Carnation blooms continue to be short of the demand, and it looks as if there is going to be a scarcity of fine flowers for the holidays, so that every bloom of salable quality will be in demand at a good price, and according to all reports, the same conditions will continue throughout the winter months, so that growers who can keep their plants in a high state of productiveness, will be well repaid for any extra care bestowed upon them.

The carnation crop has been short of the demand since the start of the season. This is not alone due to the strong demand, but generally speaking, most of the growers' plants have not been up to their usual standard of productiveness during the past ten weeks. One of the principal reasons for this is that owing to the shortage of labor it was impossible to give the plants the necessary close attention as regards topping back the growths while growing in the field which is essential for an early crop of blooms.

A large number of plants were also late topped for the purpose of carrying them over the midwinter months in a low temperature to save fuel, having in view as the main object an early spring crop. Also, owing to the experience of last winter, several growers have discontinued growing carnations entirely. Taking all these facts into consideration, it is up to the grower who has his plants in good shape, to pay strict attention to their care so as to reap the benefit of the existing conditions.

A word or two concerning the price of carnation blooms, particularly from the standpoint of a grower in the middle west. It is a well known fact that growers have not realized anywhere near what they should have for their carnation crop of recent years. The great trouble has been the average price has kept to the level of the old days of the Wm. Scott and other varieties of the same degree of productiveness, while the quality demanded has been the highest grade, Mrs. C. W. Ward, Rosette, Belle Washburn, and others of the same high standard, which under the most expert growing, cannot be made to produce anywhere near as many blooms as the varieties of the old days, when buyers were not over particular about a split calyx or weak stem or an irregularly formed flower. Consequently, a large number of growers have ceased to put their time and effort in producing the highest grade carnations at a loss, and the writer maintains that the grower who makes the effort to produce the highest standard of carnation blooms, should realize at least an average price of four cents per flower for his cut during the entire season. The public is willing to pay a fair price per dozen for value received, and good carnations should never be sold for less than $1.00 per dozen. What kills the thing is the 35 cents per dozen sales. Just as long as anyone cheapens the article he has to offer, so will the public stand for it, but maintain a good price so that an equivalent of value can be offered, then there will be very little trouble in obtaining it.

The Christmas crop being a very important consideration in the growers' mind at the present time, it will be well to dwell a little on this subject for the benefit of new beginners in carnation growing. If the plants are now well furnished with buds about to show color, with others close up, a slight raising of the temperature will hasten them along without doing any serious damage to the plants, but it must not be carried to the extreme of reason by maintaining a high, close temperature so that the keeping qualities of the blooms will be impaired. A raise of two degrees in the night temperature, and two to four degrees during the day, will be sufficient without doing any harm. Watch closely the airing of the house, regulating the ventilators with the changing weather conditions of the outside during each day, and on bright days, when little or no steam heat is necessary, the ventilators can be held a little closer, provided the atmosphere of the house is not close and stuffy. Pay particular attention to the watering of the beds, watering only as the plants need it, allowing the soil to get a little to the dry side between each watering. This will hasten the opening of the blooms showing color. Attend to the disbudding as soon as there is need of it, never allowing the side buds to get lengthened out before attending to the work, because this retards the development of the main bud as well as sapping its strength.

Cut the blooms as soon as ready, never allowing them to remain on the plants to get thoroughly matured, and last but not least, do not attempt any "pickling." When a flower is ready to cut is the time to use it.

PROPAGATING.

After the turn of the year, it will be time to start up this work, but preparations can be carried on to get the beds in order and the necessary sand under cover while the weather remains open. Also, get in a good supply of fresh soil to take care of the potting or boxing of the cuttings after they are rooted, it being a poor policy to transfer the newly rooted cuttings from the sand into cold, wet soil.

Do not allow the insects to get a foothold. They can be kept in check Lime Fertilizer from Acetylene Machines.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:

There is an accumulation of sediment in our welding departments which comes from acetylene, and is a lime formation which is suitable for fertilizer. A pamphlet issued by the Pennsylvania State College on calcium, carbide and acetylene gives the following analyses taken on three per cent:

	1 %	2 %	3 %
Sand (silica)	1.24	1.10	0.97
Carbon (coke or coal)	2.08	3.95	2.14
Oxide (iron and alumina)	3.11	2.90	2.30
Lime	62.50	63.65	66.10
Water and carbonic acid	31.07	28.40	28.49
Total	100.00	100.00	100.00

The above analyses were submitted to Dr. William Frear, chemist, Pennsylvania State College, with a request for a statement regarding the use of residuum of such character for agricultural purposes, to which the following response, under date of January 1, 1915, was received:

"The three analyses submitted of residuum from acetylene machines show it to consist principally of partially carbonated slaked lime. Its composition is very nearly that of the lime slaked in the field for agricultural use. I know of no reason why this acetylene residue is not well fitted for agricultural use. On the basis of the analyses submitted, one ton of the residuum would be equivalent to approximately 50 bushels (40 pounds to the bushel) of the slaked lime above mentioned, or to 20 bushels of the best stone lime (72 pounds to the bushel)."

Under the circumstances, in your opinion, is this material suitable for a fertilizer?

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RY.

Referring to the foregoing, the analyses of the material as shown by them would seem to indicate that it contains nothing deleterious to plant growth. On the other hand, such material of this kind as I have seen has had a strong and disagreeable odor, which would indicate the presence of something perhaps gaseous and volatile which might not show in a chemical analysis. I should be prejudiced against it on that account.

George C. McCallum, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Recently Transferred from Municipal Pier Training School in Chicago to Ocean Going Vessels from New York.

The certificate of William Frear, chemist, indicates that one ton of this material would be equivalent to about 1,500 pounds of stone lime. It is stated and accepted, I believe, generally, that ground lime in proper quantity is as effective in fertilizing value as the ordinary grade of quicklime. The agricultural department of the University of Illinois strongly recommends for general use finely ground limestone, in preference to burnt lime. We place much weight on their opinions, and our own experience here verifies their recommendations. While finely ground limestone is slower in action, it appears to be equally effective, and all possibility of harmful results in the way of burning and by reason of the caustic nature of the burnt stone are avoided by the use of the ground limestone.

Comparatively little lime or limestone is used in greenhouses, so that the item of cost per pound is not nearly so important as in cases where large areas of outdoor lands are treated. We are able to buy a good quality of ground limestone, laid down on the railroad here, at the present time at $1.35 per yard of 2,500 pounds, and we prefer it and find it more desirable than any other form of lime which can be applied.

On the basis of Mr. Frear's analyses, the material mentioned, per ton, would be equivalent to 1,500 pounds. I do not think, therefore, that a ton of this material would have any more fertilizing value than the yard of ground limestone (2,500 pounds). It is questionable whether the material spoken of could be shipped any great distance and laid down for less than $1.35 per ton. Considering the small amount of lime used in greenhouses and the very small possible difference in cost, we should not consider it worth while to experiment with a new material. We know that the ground limestone, even when it does not prove beneficial, is absolutely harmless to the general run of greenhouse plants, and we have not this assurance regarding the carbide residue. LIMITED CHRISTMAS SUPPLY EVIDENT.

This market, in common with most places, is suffering from an extreme shortage of flowers of all kinds and little relief is in sight. Prices are advancing daily and the trials of the retailers are becoming greater as the great day draws near. Growers hold out little encouragement as to the supply and the shops are stocking up with artificial effects and seasonable plants, and these will be pushed to the limit of available salesmanship to overcome the cut flower shortage and still maintain the semblance of flower stores.

CLUB MEETING OF UNUSUAL INTEREST.

The florists' club meeting of December 11 was a well attended and most successful affair. Nearly 40 members and visitors were present. The strong features of the proceedings were the addresses by E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind., and Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich., both of whom were present with exhibits of the new rose, Premier, by E. G. Hill, and novelties in late blooming chrysanthemums by Elmer D. Smith. The keenest interest was given the remarks of the two distinguished visitors, who related the details of the trials encountered in the pursuance of the process of originating and disseminating new varieties. Mr. Hill, in his remarks, paid a high tribute to Mr. Smith, as the most successful originator of chrysanthemums in America and the late varieties on exhibition were a substantial evidence of his skill. The vase of one hundred of Rose Premier blooms, also on exhibition, was referred to by Mr. Hill as the triumph of his life's work in that line, though he modestly accorded to Pernet Ducher of Lyon, France, as entitled to the highest honors for his very successful production of numbers of varieties of roses of rare merit. The speaker very interestingly injected some humorous anecdotes into his address at the conclusion of which he was made the target for many inquiries from the members present, touching many phases of the business, all of which were ably handled by "the sage of Richmond." He predicted a rapid reinstallation of flowers in the minds of the American people and most prosperous conditions for all in the trade.

Mr. Smith easily sustained his reputation as a master of chrysanthemum culture by his exhaustive treatment of the subject, from the selection and care of stock plants to the cutting, packing and shipping of the flowers. He, too, was called upon to answer many questions bearing upon the grower's troubles and was able to give lucid instructions covering the points raised. Of these, the so-called chrysanthemum midge, was referred to as the most troublesome and destructive of the enemies of chrysanthemum culture. Some specimens of the pest were on exhibition by a local grower, who feels impelled to destroy his whole stock, so badly is it infested with this pest. It developed that the most successful method of treatment of infested plants is continuous and strong tobacco smoking for at least 30 consecutive days and nights.

H. J. Stahelin, who had just returned from Richmond, Ind., the home of the new Rose Premier, added his high tribute to the merit of this novelty as seen growing there. Mr. Stahelin is so well pleased with the variety that he will, in the early spring, plant five houses of it, requiring over 15,000 plants.

A committee was appointed by the chair to examine and report upon the flowers on exhibition, the result to be published in the trade papers.

D. W. Worthington, representing Peters & Reed Pottery Co., Zanesville, Ohio, was an interested visitor at the meeting.

REPORT ON CHRYSANTHEMUM EXHIBITS.

The committee appointed to view these flowers reports them valuable additions to the list of fine varieties already in commerce and highly commends them to growers. The variety Victory, is especially distinct, and its long range of blooming period from early November till a corresponding date in December adds materially to its value. Loyalty is distinct and beautiful and from the appearance of the blooms, is a free grower. December Queen may be properly termed a bronze of extraordinary beauty, and will find by its merits, a coveted place in the list of bronze varieties.

The originator's full description of the novelties follows:

Victory.—An incurved of the purest glistening white, free and easy to grow. Maturing from November 11 to Thanksgiving, according to date of buds. The first bud selected September 12 was fully developed on November 11, Victory day, hence the name.

Loyalty.—An ideal variety for Thanksgiving use maturing November 20-30 from buds selected September 15-30. A bright yellow—high rounded incurved forming a clean upright growth. December Queen.—Color bright yellow and as the petals are slightly penciled with red gives it an orange or very light bronze cast. Maturing November 25 to December 5.

Baby Anemone.—The smallest of the anemone section. White with yellow center. Dissemination 1920.

No. 152-5-16.—The large incurved white. Dissemination 1920.

ROSE PREMIER EXHIBIT.

The committee appointed to examine closely, and to report on the exhibit of a hundred blooms of this novelty, at the meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club, December 11, submit the following:

"We regard this rose in all its features and constitutional qualities to be far superior to any rose now in commerce. It is so far in advance of all other varieties, that mere comparison does not alone disclose its merits, which in the total, seems to entitle it to the designation of perfection in a rose.

"We highly commend this wonderful variety and predict for it a great future as supplying a long felt want for a rose of its magnificent color, rose-pink, with stiff thornless stems, and luxuriant and really beautiful foliage that augments the striking appearance of the rose on exhibition. Its pronounced delicious fragrance is a distinct mark of this truly wonderful rose."

TRADE SLACKENS THEN RECOVERS.

Business the early part of the week was somewhat quiet, but it is again very active. The cold, wet weather has had the effect of again advancing the prices of all flowers very sharply. Chrysanthemums are becoming scarcer every day. The call for them is very good and excellent prices are being received for all stock put on the market. Helen Frick is still the leading late pink and is very fine for this season of the year. Major Bonaffon and Appleton are the only yellow varieties to be had. Nonin, in whites, is about over for the season. Some good white Bonaffon are seen occasionally. In small chrysanthemums, such as are usually offered by the Chinese growers at this season of the year, there is quite an assortment of color, but this stock is in demand chiefly for funeral work. Roses of all varieties are very scarce. The demand is far in excess of the supply and high prices are the rule in all grades. The absence of American Beauties from the market is very marked. Cecile Brunner, one of the most popular roses we have, is very scarce. Ophelia and Shawyer, are of the leading varieties in their color. Mrs. Charles Russell is in great demand, owing to the scarcity of American Beauties and is bringing high prices. Red Radiance and Hadley are best in reds at present. Hardly any white roses are being offered at all and from all accounts very few are being grown. Some very good carnations are now arriving, and are quickly taken at good figures. Good reds are not plentiful. There is quite a quantity of second grade stock arriving, which helps to supply the demand for a moderately priced flower. The supply of violets has shortened considerably, owing to the cold snap. The shipping demand remains heavy and prices are firm. Gardenias are very scarce at present. The quality offered is none too good, but high figures are being received for all offerings. The cattleya supply has also shortened up considerably. The growers seem to be holding their stock back for the holiday trade. The call for poinsettias dwindled down during the few days following Thanksgiving and at present writhe not many are in evidence. Cut cyclamens are in good supply and are moving well. Cut ericas are to be seen everywhere, and are in much demand for decoration and basket work. Pot plants are becoming more prominently shown every day. Begonias, Lorraine and Cincinnati are very popular, as also are cyclamens in the bright colors. Pot grown Erica melanthera of the best quality is also selling readily. Boston and Harrisii have the best call among ferns. Cibotium Schieffeli is also in good demand. Adiantums are in short supply with a heavy demand. Asparagus is also scarce. Smilax is beginning to arrive.

NOTES.

Pelican, Rossi & Co., are receiving some extra fine cut ericas from Frank Pelicano's nursery on Guttenburg street. The Erica melanthera, especially, are so good that not enough can be had to supply the demand. Business at the Kearny street store is good. Great preparations are under way here for the holiday trade. Specimen cattleyas in pots, which for years have been one of the firm's leaders, are to be pushed stronger than ever this season.

H. Plath, of the Ferneries, has one of the finest lots of holiday plants for Christmas that can be found in this vicinity. His stock of nephrolepis is very fine, as also is his kentia and cibotiums. He has ferns by the thousands and also specializes in Primula, obconicas and aspidistras. He says the shipping demand is equal to that of last season and expects to clean up by the time the holidays are over.

Milton Tonini, manager of the Bay Counties Seed Company, reports the plant trade as opening in a very satisfactory manner. The demand for fruit trees promises to exceed that of last year, which was a banner season. The call for small fruits and berries is also going to be strong, according to Mr. Tonini. He has his new nursery near the Presidio, in fine shape for the coming season.

W. B. Clark, manager of the San Jose branch of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, has been receiving large plant shipments from Eureka of late. The holly, which this firm is sending out this season is of the highest qual-

INFLUENZA'S RETURN CAUSES SCARCITY.

Business has shown great improvement and with the return of the influenza epidemic, stock has been scarce and high in price. Growers are placing prices on carnations of $25 per 100 for red and $15 for assorted. Roses are selling at $12.50, $16, $20 and $25. Lilies are offered at $18. The smaller stores will have to close up for the holidays if conditions do not improve.

NOTES.

Many of the growers are completely sold out of plants.

B. A. Snyder & Co. had more orders for holiday stock than they could fill and are buying everything in sight to try and take care of the wants of their customers.

The retailers are up in arms over the high prices and many are advertising baskets of fruit in place of flowers.

North Shore Horticultural Society.

The above society held its monthly meeting December 6. President Head was in the chair and after the usual routine business had been transacted, he introduced the speaker of the evening, William Hoven of Naperville, who gave a very interesting account of the work that is being done in the elimination of the common barberry in the effort to stomp out the black stem rot in wheat and corn growing states. He spoke of the efforts now being made to secure an interstate law to prevent the shipment of Berberis vulgaris and its varieties into such states. He asked the co-operation of all gardeners in the work of combating the ravages of the San Jose scale by thorough spraying and in discontinuing the planting of such trees as the mountain ash, quince, etc., which serve as a breeding place for this pest. The members present accorded the speaker a very hearty vote of thanks.

The monthly exhibits included six fine cyclamen plants made by President Head, which scored 95 points; one vase of Narcissus Soleil d'Or, shown by George Wilson, 98 points, and six winter-flowering begonias staged by J. H. Francis, 98 points. The judges for the evening were E. Boulter, E. Bollinger and O. Pettersen. The gold medal for the total points received on the monthly competitions during the year was awarded to President Head, whose score was 1050. George Wilson with 956 points captured the silver medal and the bronze went to J. H. Francis with 835 points.

J. H. FRANCIS, Cor. Sec'y.

The Late Miss Adeline Krombach.

Miss Adeline Krombach, who had a retail store at Fourth avenue and 25th street, Brooklyn, N. Y., died December 11, after a short illness of pneumonia, age 26 years. She was the daughter of Mrs. Eliza and the late Charles Krombach, her father having died three years ago. Miss Krombach had been familiar with the business from childhood, as her father was a florist and had a large business in connection with Greenwood cemetery. Born and educated in Brooklyn, Adeline Krombach had a large circle of friends and acquaintances. In business, she was ambitious and clever. Her early passing away evokes deep sympathy for her widowed mother, sister and brother. Her funeral was held December 14, with the ceremony of the Lutheran church. Interment was in Greenwood cemetery.

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

ity and finely berried. Mr. Clark says he is well pleased with the condition of business this season.

Almon Wheeler, of the Ruehl-Wheeler Nurseries, of San Jose, was a recent caller. His farm is noted for the quality of its field grown roses. He says trade is opening up much better than was expected. His firm, who are large growers of fruit trees, is fully booked up for the coming season.

Miss Ricordie Lee Murray on Geary street, says business was never better than at present. She has made a fine display of chrysanthemums all season. Her branch store in the Cliff hotel is always busy, and only the best grade of stock is carried there.

Most of the florists who handle holly in large quantities are expecting to receive their supply from the north in a few days. Portland and Vancouver supply this city with most of the holly used every season. Prices promise to be about the same as last year.

Charles Steffenback, on Polk street, is making an elaborate display of flowering plants for the holiday season. The poinsettias handled by this store are exceptionally good and meet with a ready sale.

Charles Kruse, of Piedmont, is bringing in some very fine Cecile Brunner roses. This is his specialty and no finer stock comes to this market. He is also a large grower of ferns.

THE appeal of American importers against the regulations of the federal horticultural board has been forwarded to the Belgian legation at Washington.

THE proposed drastic embargo against Belgian, Dutch and French plants is a serious invasion of the long-established commercial rights of the horticultural public and without proven reasons.

THE extent to which sphagnum moss has been used in war work is shown from the statement that in October last the Canadian Red Cross organization was distributing dressings of this material at the rate of 250,000 per month.

CHRISTMAS.

Advertisers and correspondents will please note that on account of Christmas THE AMERICAN FLORIST will go to press one day earlier next week, and we trust they will mail their copy as early as possible.

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Orders.

Albert Pochelon, Detroit, Mich., secretary of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, has mailed the following to members:

"Never before at any holiday was it so necessary to remind all our F. T. D. members to use their good judgment in sending out F. T. D. orders to be filled in other towns. The scarcity of flowers and blooming plants warrants all our members in eliminating as much as possible small orders amounting to $2.00 or $3.00 as they will be very hard to fill in some sections of the country.

Be sure and instruct all your clerks taking orders to be delivered in other towns, to be frank with their customers and state facts; it will save trouble and disappointment all around."

National Publicity for Flowers.

There is no doubt that florists generally have faced a rather poor condition of business this year. Our publicity committees realize that this is the main reason for the shortage, small though it be, in the amount, $50,000, which it was expected could be raised for the first year of our campaign. We are over $4,000 short of planned requirements.

The florist industry has gone "over the top" in practically all other "drives" but its own. It would be unpatriotic to criticize and yet it may be pointed out that the florists who did contribute to the fund, are unanimously of the opinion that the florist business would have been sadly the worse this year had it not been for the campaign. Being financially interested in our movement, they have made it their business, through inquiry and comparisons, to determine for themselves the value of our work. And they are satisfied to continue their subscription for another year, and the year after, and then a further year. There's faith for you!

We are now in the closing days of 1918. Florists are anticipating an unusually good Christmas trade, and prospects for a prosperous year are exceedingly bright. It is a good time for all who have allowed the present year to pass without making a subscription to the fund to sit down and write a cheque for a 1919 contribution. Better still, fill out our form, sent on request, covering an annual contribution for three years.

A prominent retail florist said the other day, "Why make three or four years the term of the campaign? You may have my support as long as I am in business. The movement is the best ever instituted in the florist industry and should never stop. Why halt at an expenditure of $50,000 when $100,000 would double the benefit and put flowers where they ought to be—on every home table, every day in the year?"

There's the rub! With a little less than our planned amount, we have barely scratched the surface of possibility. But the scratching was deep, as we have discovered. With more money we could brand instead of scratch our slogan, "Say it with flowers" on the public mind, and it would stay—as long as we renewed the branding. It is up to the trade to make this possible. The committees have a fine working organization, but it is money only that will keep the machinery going.

Our promotion bureau has been quite busy in the last two weeks, despatching the various aids for direct publicity provided through our service. We have a descriptive pamphlet ready to mail to anyone who makes request.

JOHN YOUNG, Secy.

Test of Broadness and Vision.

All of the florists who contributed to the publicity fund during the year just passing, feel that it was the beginning of a policy that will ultimately bring out ideals which must surely emanate from certain types who always strive to do things that will aid the trade generally by watching the way and manner in which we proceed the next year in broadness and vision, as well as generosity towards the fund for 1919. If the campaign for the year had only taught us the realization of the strength of co-operation, that would have been sufficient for a beginning, but it also aided in building up a good-will spirit that was worth many times the price paid. And, if we accomplished this, is it not worth trying again, only with more vim, to do still more to hold the good-will we have just started through our first effort nationally?

In order to maintain the proper standard, it is necessary to enlist the aid of everyone to send in their appropriation when our secretary sends out the pledge for 1919. And by the ready response, may we judge the enthusiasm for still greater work. On all sides, we have heard the trade generally commenting on the good our national publicity has had on the public in furthering the uses of flowers, through our slogan "Say It With Flowers," and surely the future has greater progress in store for us as we continue. May our fund grow bigger each year so that we may all feel that we were privileged to contribute to the fund started for the benefit of all connected with flowers and their bi-products.

The year 1919 will be the real test for all of us who wish to see the campaign succeed, as, after all, the success will depend upon the number of men who contribute, and their interest in tying up with publicity campaigns afterward.

Lancaster County Florists' Association.

On account of the close proximity to the holidays of our regular meeting night, the date was changed to December 10, and the place the Brenneman building. The meeting was called to order at 7 p. m., President Elmer Weaver in the chair, with a little routine business and the nomination of officers for the ensuing year. The club has set a precedent of holding all officers over for a second term and this precedent was not broken at this meeting with the result of the following nominations: Elmer Weaver, Tonks, president; Lemon Landis, Lancaster, vice-president; Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, secretary; Harry K. Rohrer, Lancaster, treasurer. The next meeting will be held in our regular rooms at the chamber of commerce and it will be a joint meeting with the ladies' auxiliary, they to assist in arranging a programme for the meeting. The president appointed David Rose, Rudolph Nagle and Lemon Landis to take charge of the sports for the evening. An adjournment was then made to the table and a buffet lunch enjoyed by all, after which bowling was indulged in by one party, cards by another, billiards by another and pool by another, while little groups discussed their business problems.

J. Wade Galey, of Strasburg, carried off first prize for high score in bowling and Chas. B. Herr of Strasburg carried off the honors in the cards. H. A. Schroyer was champion story teller, and Albert M. Herr and E. F. Barr, dusters, as they went to a venison dinner at the Elks' club about 10 p. m.

A. F. Strickler and Lemon Landis were voted delightful hosts, and the remaining member of the committee, Harry K. Rohrer, at home, sick in bed, was extended a vote of sympathy. President Weaver's hot coffee and sweet cider were enjoyed by all and about 11:30 the affair was a thing of the past, the fond memory of which will linger with those fortunate enough to be there, for many a day.

EARLY CHRISTMAS DEMAND IS HEAVY.

The early Christmas demand is heavy and according to practically all the wholesalers the orders call for more stock than they expect to have, consequently some of them were accepted with the understanding that they would do the best they can under the existing conditions at the prevailing market prices. The high prices advertised will probably be realized on almost all items with some still going higher and a possible drop in one or two which will depend largely on the weather conditions. The weather the past week was rather warm and cloudy with heavy rains at intervals which was none too encouraging but meant a big saving in coal to the grower. When one takes into consideration that quite a large number of greenhouses were closed this season owing to the 50 per cent coal restriction which was later lifted, shortage of help, the advanced cost of materials from 50 to 200 per cent and the prospects of a long war there is quite a fair supply of stock and while conditions at present are not as favorable as the retailer in general would like to see them, especially in regard to the present shortage of stock and high prices, no one should complain, for the great war ended in a brilliant victory for us in a much shorter time than anyone even dared to hope for and probably removed more serious problems for the future than were even encountered before. Every now and then you hear that the trade never experienced such a shortage of stock or such high prices before at Christmas as is the case this year, which is all wrong for one of the leading growers who keeps pretty close tab on conditions in general called our attention to the Christmas demand of 1906 which the writer looked up in THE AMERICAN FLORIST issue of December 29 of that year when the prices realized on almost all items were in line with those quoted now. Extra select long-stemmed American Beauty roses then sold for as high as $18 per dozen and fancy Richmond in some instances brought as high as $50 per 100. Killarney brought as much in some special lots and it was no uncommon thing to see it sold at $35. Chateau, Bridesmaid and Uncle John roses were quite a factor in the market then and also brought high prices. Red carnations sold at $12 to $15 per 100 with Lawson and Enchantress bringing $8, $10 and $12 per 100. Figuring that the cost of production now is 50 to 300 per cent higher than it was then and the quality of the stock offered this year is better, owing to the newer varieties, which are far superior in quality every way, the buyer is getting off easy this Christmas compared to the one referred to which everyone will admit was an exceptionally good one and is used here as an illustration because conditions are very much similar especially in regard to prices. The market should clean up completely this Christmas at the figures quoted, for the outlook is anything but bright for a large supply because there are more orders already booked than there will be flowers to fill them and more are arriving every day. Many of the retailers are looking conditions straight in the face and are doing everything possible to cover up in the way of shortages by featuring artificial stock in every shape and manner appropriate for the holidays and are gambling heavily that the public will buy them as it never did before. In addition to American Beauty and all the roses grown for this market, and carnations, the offerings will consist of orchids, gardenias, poinsettias, sweet peas, mignonette, lilies, callas, Paper White narcissus daisies, violets, snapdragons, calendulas, pansies, lily of the valley, stevia and a few other miscellaneous items that will be included in the shipments. Holly is scarce and high in price at this writing and very few red winter-berries have made their appearance. Mistletoe is in good supply. Greens will be good property this year and the late demand for all kinds of supplies appropriate for holiday use is exceptionally heavy. It might not be out of place to mention here that sweet peas are being sold now at prices ranging from $3 to $5 per 100, lilies at $25 to $20 per 100 and carnations from $10 to $20 per 100, according to quality. The new pink carnation Laddie is bringing top-notch prices and is followed closely by Ward and Rosette of which some extra fancy stock is seen at a few of the houses. The average buyer is satisfied to secure stock at almost any figure and is complaining more about his inability to get stock than about the prices he is paying.

NOTES.

John Ingravollo, who was with Company H of the 4th infantry in France for some time, where he was in action for several months, is visiting friends here this week. He was wounded on July 5, when a piece of shrapnel struck his right leg, but is able to be about now and is proud of the two gold stripes denoting two years' service and a third gold one for being injured in battle. Previous to enlisting he was proprietor of the store known as the West Side Florist, at 1001 South Racine avenue.

In the matter of William Langhout, bankrupt, notice has been given by Referee in Bankruptcy Eastman, that on December 27 at 10 a. m. at his office 907 Monadnock building, he will declare and direct the first payment on claims of all creditors which have been proved and allowed. The receiver's final report will also be made at the same time.

Al Collatz, foreman for J. A. Budlong for a number of years, bought the John Prochazka range at Niles Center last week, consisting of about 50,000 feet of glass devoted to roses. Mr. Collatz is a brother of William Collatz, who is identified with the A. F. Amling Co. at Maywood.

Corporal George Manos, formerly manager of the retail florist stand in the Illinois Central railroad station, was honorably discharged from the army last week, and is again on duty at the same place in the same capacity. He is a cousin of George Manos, the Union Depot florist.

Mrs. O. Johnson, wife of the manager of the Eutawia Greenhouse Co.'s local wholesale store, is able to be about again after being confined to bed for three weeks with a severe attack of Spanish influenza.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. are handling a good supply of southern holly, which is in brisk demand, owing to the scarcity of red winter-berries this season. This firm has a good supply of Begonia Cincinnati in five and six inch pots to offer for the holidays.

Weiland & Risch received word from Eddie Schultz, who was formerly in their employ that he arrived safely overseas with the American troops, but too late to take part in any of the fighting.

Miss Marguerite McNulty, who has charge of Peter Reinberg's office, says that she does not expect her brother Archie, who is with the 107th Engineers in France, home until next July.

Julius Snyder, of Boston, Mass., was here this week buying stock for his holiday trade. He paid his old Boston friend, T. E. Waters, a pleasant visit during his brief stay.

Walter Amling will grow the rose, Columbia on a large scale next season at Maywood. It will replace Ophelia almost entirely.

Eddie Ahlas, formerly employed in the A. L. Randall Co.'s supply department, is now with the Grossberg-Tyler-Finnermann Co.

Mrs. August Barnett underwent a successful operation at the Augustana hospital last week and is well on the way to recovery.

Mrs. Chas. Erne was called to Terre Haute, Ind., last week by the sudden death of her brother.

The Outlook for Christmas is not any too encouraging for a large supply of Cut Flowers in the Chicago Wholesale Market and it is almost a certainty there will not be anywhere near enough to go around. Only the most favorable weather will relieve the situation and we suggest that all our customers get in touch with us immediately in regard to their supply. We will do the best we can for everyone and that is all any house can offer under the present existing conditions when everything points to the greatest Christmas scarcity in the history of the trade.

Jack Byers, who is with the American troops in France, writes that he is safe and sound and was in the thick of the fighting until November 11 at 11 o'clock, when all firing ceased according to the terms of the armistice. There will be big doings here "when Johnnie comes marching home" and here's hoping that it will be soon.

The Excell Laboratories, 115-117 East South Water street, are being kept on the jump, filling orders for Zenke's liquid fungicide, which has given splendid satisfaction to the growers since it was introduced as far back as 1914. Many of the growers claim it is the best they have ever used for mildew.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. will have a large supply of California holly to offer again this Christmas, which is welcome news to everyone, for red winterberries are exceedingly scarce. California holly is a splendid substitute, and even better than the Michigan berries, especially for basket work.

Eddie Hunt, who is at present stationed at the Great Lakes naval training station, will give Manager Klingsporn and his assistants a lift during the holidays at the Chicago Flower Grovers' Association store.

The Grossberg-Tyler-Finnermann Co. is having a strong demand for artificial flowers, of which it has a large supply on display regularly at the store. Many out-of-town visitors were seen here this week.

Russett & Washburn are cutting a good supply of stock, but the demand continues to be so heavy with them that it is impossible to fill all the orders that keep arriving.

fill it the best we possibly can.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is cutting a splendid grade of roses, particularly American Beauty, which are bringing high prices, owing to the perfect quality. Some fine Mrs. Chas. Russell are also seen at this store, together with choice Ophelia. The supply department is working overtime to keep pace with the demand and is doing a land-office business in made-up wreaths. August Poehlmann, in speaking of the warm weather the past month, mentioned that it has saved the growers many a dollar on their coal bills, which amounts to quite a considerable sum at their place, where such large quantities are used daily.

Jake Baumhardt, of Morton Grove, was wounded in action October 30 and his brother has been reported missing in action since October 25. Nic Dahm, Jr., who was drafted about the same time as Jake Baumhardt, is stationed at Camp Devens, Mass., and will probably be granted an honorable discharge in the near future.

O. A. & L. A. Tonner have had a heavy call for peacans from all sections of the country as a result of their advertisement in THE AMERICAN FLORIST last week and new orders are arriving every day. A large number of the local florists also took advantage of their special offer and some have already reordered.

Wietor Bros. are cutting a good supply of roses and carnations, but have plenty of orders for all the stock they will have for the holidays. Some particularly fine Rosette carnations are attracting the attention of the best city buyers.

Zech & Mann are featuring a magnificent grade of stevia in addition to their usual complete line of all other seasonable stock. The early demand for Christmas is extra heavy this year

Percy Jones, Inc., is offering some wonderful bargains in supplies, which this firm is handling in larger quantities than ever before. Business at this thing points to the best Christmas ever.

Joseph Ziska and Raymond Ziska, of Joseph Ziska & Sons, are confined to their home with the Spanish influenza.
To make matters worse, five of the men in the wire department are on the sick list from the same cause.

The firm of J. A. Budlong is cutting its share of roses, but the supply which enables them to take care of their regular customers in good shape considering conditions, cleans up at an early hour each day.

Ernest Weinhoeber has moved into the city from his country home at Highland Park and will celebrate another birthday anniversary December 21.

Peter Baumann, manager of Peter Reinberg's wholesale store, is the proud father of a baby boy, who arrived at

Frank Ochslin, who has been con-

Chas. Erne, of Erne & Company, entertained a number of his friends at his home in Oak Park, December 14, and it is needless to add that everyone present had a most delightful time. Fred Longren, Allie Zech, George Mohn, T. E. Waters, E. C. Pruner and Sam Reid and their wives were there, as were Ed. Goldenstein, August Barnett, E. A. Ollinger, Allan Humanson and Chas. Worth. Mr. Erne did everything possible to show everyone a good time, and everyone will agree that he certainly did to a "queen's taste," for they stayed until 3 o'clock the following morning.

Vaughan's Seed Store is fortunate in the return of several of its war service employees. Christmas stocks handled have taken care of all regular customers who generally book with this establishment months in advance.

At a hearing, December 12, in the matter of Pyfer & Olsem, bankrupt, it is understood that the Schuettler estate made an offer of $500 for the equities of others interested in the property.

August Poehlmann has been confined to his home this week with influenza.

Visitors: Gust. Rusch, of Gust. Rusch & Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Frank Gorly, of Grimm & Gorly, St. Louis, Mo.; R. Williams, South Bend, Ind.; W. Kinyon, South Bend, Ind.; W. G. Matthews, Dayton, O.; L. Pueblo, Colorado.

Business as well as the stock on hand is unusually good. The influenza ban was lifted December 6, and conditions are fast returning to normal. There was an immense demand for funeral work, but despite the shortage of help, the stores were able to take care of the heavy call, although many out-of-town orders were of necessity turned down.

NOTES.

Chrysanthemums are practically gone but Jacob Pistorius at the state hospital is still cutting excellent blooms. He also has a bench of violets which are in fine condition and very productive.

Geo. Bolt & Son are showing sweet peas of splendid quality in a wide variety.

J. P.

COLUMBUS, O.—C. A. Roth will close his establishment and go south for the winter.

HAMILTON, ONT.—From present indications the local supply of cut flowers for Christmas will be limited and high in price, but there will be a fine collection of plants.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—Force Parker, referee in bankruptcy, has given notice that a final meeting of creditors of the Los Angeles Flower Market will be held in his office at 10 a. m., December 18, at which time the dividends, if any will be determined.

The market continues to be short of stock of all kinds with high prices prevailing on everything. The quality of Russell continues to be the best in roses. Carnations have picked up in supply on account of the exceptionally bright weather we have been having. Sweet peas also are in better supply. Violets are still a little short of normal receipts, but the quality is very good. Lily of the valley and lilies are in fair supply. The demand has not diminished to any noticeable extent, and if it continues through the holidays, it will work quite a hardship, with the normal demand for the occasion. Funeral work, of course, is the big consumer, and the volume of this has never been equaled before. In greens the market is fairly well supplied, with high prices prevailing.

NOTES.

There is little chance for the retail florist to rest these days with the enormous amount of funeral work he is called upon to put up, and the holidays drawing nearer. It is quite a problem.

and keeps all of them on the jump to satisfy everyone.

The plant growers are priming all their Christmas stock, and they say that everything in their houses is placed, which makes it look as though it is going to be a prosperous season as well as a merry one.

Geo. B. Windler has finished cutting his stevia, which is always the best on the market. He made a nice clean-up on his cut this year, as he had lots of it, and it was in great demand.

Oscar Ruf is up and about again, after his attack of the influenza. You cannot keep a good man down, especially when there is money to be made.

LIMITED SUPPLY AND PRICES HIGH.

The past week has been noted for high prices and scarcity of stock; never in the recollection of the oldest market patrons, have carnations brought such high prices, except at Christmas, and frequently not as much even then. Ten to $12 per hundred, and $15 for Laddie have been the figures every day the past week, with nothing carried over from day to day. All other lines are in much the same condition as regards extreme high figures. The rose stock is excellent, with shortest grades starting at $8. Many holiday times such stock went begging at $4 per hundred. American Beauties were, perhaps, the most plentiful as to the quantity grown, and are about the only normal priced flower in the list, being quoted $7.50 per doz. Long stemmed special Russell bring almost as much, going as high as 50 cents each. All the callas and Easter lilies coming in do not quite supply the demand at 25 cents. It is said that is but little demand, the high figures being due to the light supply. This may be true, but the quantity stock are the carnations, and they are bringing relatively the highest price. The tag ends of the chrysanthemum crop have been marketed as never before. Scrawny looking stock, both in the large flowered varieties and pompons, is bunched to look its best, and finds purchasers mostly for cheap funeral work. Violets, single and double, are scarce. Cattleyas are also at top figures. Sweet peas are helping out with increasing shipments and the quality is good. Next week is a puzzle, no one appears to be able to size up the situation with any degree of certainty. Edward Reid figures it out by precedent, saying, "Did you ever know a Christmas when flowers were not plentiful? There will be plenty of stock, but prices will, like they have all fall, rule high." There have been a goodly number of orders booked from out-of-town buyers, who have to plan well ahead, and depend on their wholesalers to treat them right. The continued high prices, which if the usual increased supply of stock does not develop for the Christmas market, are likely to increase, will make late comers, who must have flowers for their orders, fairly gasp at the exalted figures. Flowering and foliage plants, have by some dealers, been pushed in former years, when cut flower prices were considered prohibitive, but this season such stock, particularly in the blooming classes, is as scarce as the flowers. There have been previous disappointments, scarcely any of the plant orders being completely filled, while many find to their sorrow, that they were weeks behind and are obliged to make the best use they can of the culls. There has been a splendid demand for all kinds of Christmas greens. Lycopodium started at 15 cents per pound, but quickly went to 20, at which price most has been sold. Boxwood opened at 20 cents and has held at 20 cents the last few days of the week. Holly is coming in rather slowly, good stock being quoted at $6.00 per case, 2x2x4 feet. Much of it is not well berried. Fancy holly, well berried, will, it is said, bring more money.

TRANSPORTATION TROUBLES.

Express transportation difficulties are not yet eliminated, as was hoped for under consolidation or government management. A box of chrysanthemum flowers, intended for exhibition before the florists' club of this city, December 3, was shipped by Elmer D. Smith & Co., Adrian, Mich., November 30, but did not reach here until December 11. The flowers were in very good condition. The varieties were Loyalty, a very pretty incurved yellow, a trifle larger than Bonnaillon; Victory a superb glistening white, well formed, good sized flower of great depth, and December Queen, a large tawny or light bronzy yellow. All three are good commercial late varieties. Shippers of cut flowers have found the parcel post special delivery, on all direct routes, to be much more expeditious than express. Boxes are delivered to railway station mail offices half hour before train time. Printed schedule for departure of mails are readily obtainable at all central post offices, which enables shippers to easily make any desired train. Boxes should be weighed and supplied with the necessary stamps, including those for taxes and special delivery, which are then accepted as correct from frequent and reliable shippers, and avoid delays at the station when minutes count in close connections.

WITH THE WHOLESALESMEN.

Sergeant Jacob M. Deutcher, of the Philadelphia Wholesale Florists' Exchange, is back again on the job, having been given an honorable discharge, with a record marked excellent. He is in splendid spirits and glad to get into the harness again. Exceptionally good rose stock in all the leading varieties is seen here. Their growers report good Christmas crops.

Leo Niessen stated: "We are prepared to handle a big holiday business. There will be a good quantity of all classes of stock, not, of course, as much as last year, but at the increased prices, it will likely foot up to as much or more in money. American Beauty roses are in good supply at about last year's prices."

Edward Reid relies on his growers; they know the day and date, and are generally there with the goods. Even in this year of labor and fuel handicaps, he expects a good supply, particularly of roses and carnations, and a demand that will more than take it all. John Berger, of Berger Bros., looks for a good business, with supply 20 per cent below that of last season. It will be a sellers' market, and men who want stock, will have to be early, with their orders.

The favorable weather brought in the Christmas Richmonds of Jos. Heacock Co., two weeks too soon, but as they were all marketed at last year's holiday prices, there was no harm done. A good supply is in prospect for next week.

NOTES.

Growers certainly stand in their own light and profit, by the careless handling of their cut flowers when made ready for market. Most stock is tied in bundles of 25. Roses, by some growers, are still sent loose, but others grade and tie in bunches. This is a step forward, but why not take another and first wrap each with paper, leaving the ends open, exposing the flowers to sight and then tie? The percentage of broken flowers during the course of a year is considerable and would be almost entirely avoided with this care. All soft stemmed or leafy stock is protected from wilting by the single sheet of paper so quickly applied.

The Robert Craig Co. reports the best Christmas trade in years. All through November and up to this time, from 10 to 50 large cases, weighing 200 to 250 pounds, have been shipped daily. There has been but little express delay. All flowering stock has been sold since December 1.

C. U. Liggett finds a wonderful demand from the trade for all kinds of rooted cuttings. Primula malacoides as a salable pot plant moves out faster than his growers can get it in flower.

Visitors: F. Malbranc, Johnston, Pa.; Frank Traendly, Paul Dailledouze and E. G. Asmus, New York. K.

HIGH PRICES AT CHRISTMAS INEVITABLE.

The leading features of the past week were a light supply of roses, carnations and violets, and advancing prices. In orchids and gardenias, there was a plentiful supply. Although the chrysanthemum season is practically ended, a few lots of fair stock are yet arriving. Discussing weather conditions makes rather dull reading, but at this time of year, when every sunny day counts, it is permissible. The past week opened with fair weather, but the last half was miserable, with rain and fog. Saturday, December 14, being the most disagreeable of all. It is now inevitable that cut flower prices will be high, possibly higher than they have been for some years. But even with a scarcity, growers, wholesalers and retailers alike must consider that the last analysis brings us to the public, the ultimate consumers. The trade has had its full share of hardships during the war, particularly the growers, and it is reasonable that they must have good prices, but reason and sound judgment should rule. This winter will not be long in passing; the bulbous stock will soon begin to come in, followed by the spring and summer flowers. It is reasonable to believe that by another winter's opening, trade will be back in its normal channel in increased volume. Now is the time for co-operation and straight thinking in every branch of the trade.

December 16.—The supply of stock is light and prices continue to advance. As there has been no sunshine for about five days, the outlook for Christmas stock is not promising. Prices on Christmas trees are high. Fifth avenue is being decorated for the return of the soldiers, and many trees, and yards of hemlock and laurel roping are being used. At this writing the supply of holly seems light.

December 18.—Holly, which started at $10 per case, is now $8.50 and may go lower as it seems to be more plentiful. The lowest price for No. 2 roses is $10 per 100.

NOTES.

A well attended meeting, which took the form of a conference among growers, wholesalers and retailers, was held on the night of December 16. We understand that the movement to hold such a meeting was instigated by a number of retailers who are greatly dissatisfied with the high prices they are paying for cut flowers. Among those present who expressed their views were: C. H. Totty, Frank H. Traendly, F. R. Pierson, Eugene Dailledouze, Charles Weber, G. E. M. Stumpp, Chas. H. Brown, Max Schling and J. B. Nugent. It seemed to be the general opinion that the growers are seriously placed and considering present unfavorable conditions, should receive good prices for their stock. It was the consensus of opinion among the growers that they must have higher prices if they are to continue in business. Objections were raised by the retailers to the wholesalers selling to speculators. The meeting accomplished nothing, except a public expression of the views of leading men in the different branches of the trade. Briefly stated, the growers and wholesalers believe that all the stock that can be placed on the market this winter will sell, even if prices go higher than they are at present.

Here is something good from Dr. Woods Hutchinson: "When I hear wealthy, well meaning citizens planning what they are going to do for the boys when they get back, I always tell them not to worry about that but to lie awake nights preparing for what the boys are going to do to them." That is sensible. Of course, the wounded and disabled men should, and will be, taken care of, but there has been too much silly rush about the "boys." And it is well enough to state that they are not boys, but men. Therefore, it is ridiculous to suppose that these physically sound men who have been through the hell of shot, shell and poison gas, have waded through oceans of mud and water and crawled and fought through tangled woods, in brief, endured all that human frame can endure, will not know how to take care of themselves.

At the annual meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society, held at Glen Cove, L. I., on the evening of December 12, Joseph Adler, superintendent of "Elsmore," the estate of Lieutenant Harvey S. Ladew was elected president. Lieut. Ladew is now in France. Other officers elected are Frank Watson, vice-president; Ernest Woodlake, recording secretary; Ernest J. Brown, treasurer; H. Goodband, corresponding secretary; executive committee, William Noonan, Thomas Henderson, Benjamin Sullivan, William Neilstead, William Churchill, William G. Carter and Thomas Meach. Robert Jones, the retiring president, was elected a trustee to serve three years. The finances of the society were shown to be in good condition.

American methods of farming, died December 12 in the New York hospital. He had established a farm at Huntington, L. I., where he had a number of Japanese students.

J. H. Small & Sons, Madison avenue and 52nd street, have handsomely decorated the exterior front of their store with a number of large boxwood wreaths profusely decorated with red ribbon. Fine boxwood wreaths are a specialty of this store.

A noteworthy feature in the window of the Dard's store, Madison avenue and 44th street, is a large plaque on which a large number of small bouquets are arranged, made up in the old-fashioned style from various small flowers.

Meyer Othile, of Riedel & Meyer, Inc., 49 West 28th street, was taken suddenly and violently ill on the afternoon of December 16 and taken to a hospital. At this writing the physicians have not determined the exact nature of his illness.

Harry Payne, a well-known retailer of Washington, D. C., called at the local office of THE AMERICAN FLORIST, December 14. He was for many years manager for the late Joseph Freeman, and is now in business for himself.

At the store of Frank E. Campbell, 1970 Broadway, active preparations are in progress for the Christmas trade, noteworthy being a fine stock of plants that have just arrived, including heather, poinsettias and crotons.

Calling recently on J. A. Wollmer's of 25th street, Brooklyn, we found him actively engaged in preparations for Christmas. In connection with a good retail business he has several greenhouses.

The dinner of the Wholesale Cut Flower Protective Association, Inc., on the evening of December 14 (Forefathers' day) was a very enjoyable affair. Further notes of it will be found elsewhere.

Frank Sheehan, for many years a salesman in the wholesale district, is now with Walter F. Sheridan, 123 West 28th street.

Miss Adeline Krombach, of Brooklyn, died December 11. A more extended notice will be found in obituary column.

Hession, Madison avenue and 74th street, has already put in a fine stock of heather, poinsettias and other plants. Wallace R. Francis, formerly with Frank E. Campbell, is now with J. P. Gilbanks, 50 Broadway.

CUT FLOWER OFFERINGS LIMITED.

The windows of the flower shops have taken on a regular holiday appearance, not with cut flowers and bright poinsettias, however, as is usual at this season, but with immortelle wreaths and cemetery decorations, and the sales are remarkably brisk. With some of the growers, carnations are very scarce and roses are none too plentiful with prices soaring to lofty heights. Well-berried holly made its appearance, December 14, coming from quite a distance and the sale has not as yet been any too brisk, as a number of days still remain until Christmas. The price is high. Cedar and cypress wreaths will sell well for decorations.

NOTES.

In a recent visit to the store of Geny Bros. we were surprised to see an abundant supply of fresh white chrysanthemums, which are being used in a large number of funeral designs. It appears that Oscar Geny in charge of the growing end of the business has grown a second crop for the Christmas demand. These include the smaller yellow and bronze types but there are many more of the white varieties, all of very good quality. This firm has a large quantity of the Paper White narcissus in bloom, but are short on carnations. They will have excellent roses for the holidays but the cut will be limited. Everything in the way of wreaths and novelties is seen here in abundance.

The Joy Floral Co. has a very fair cut each day, but no surplus. There will be plenty of carnations and roses to supply both the local and Chattanooga stores. On the morning of Friday, "the unlucky thirteenth," they had a disastrous fire at the Chattanooga establishment which destroyed everything in the way of supplies, wreaths and baskets. Fortunately the ice-box was not affected and the front of the store escaped, and on Saturday the first day's business of the week was recorded. This firm will be well prepared with a fine line of plants.

Louis Haury, Jr., never fails to have a fine display of pot plants of the simpler varieties at the market house.

M. C. D.

Dayton, O.

Rolf Zetlitz is busy with a large force overhauling the recently acquired plant of the Miami Floral Co., and expects to have it ready for planting in February, devoting considerable space to the E. G. Hill Co.'s new roses.

W. G. Matthews reports fine prospects for the holiday business. Mr. Matthews was in Chicago this week looking up stock.

MONTREAL, QUE.—The Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club, at its annual meeting, December 2, elected officers for 1919, as follows: J. J. Trevis, president; R. Miller, vice-president; W. H. Horobin, secretary-treasurer.

The Seed Trade

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

EUROPEAN wholesale seed lists are exceedingly late this year.

ALL indications point to a good business in flower seeds the coming season.

The first of the new season catalogues to reach us is that of the H. G. Hastings Co., Atlanta, Ga.

The Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago, has installed winter window boxes in their warehouse offices.

SOME big deals in gladiolus bulbs are reported, and heavy demand is anticipated after the holidays.

ONE well-informed dealer says the American trade must depend very largely on home-grown seeds in 1919.

GOOD demand continues for bulbs of Narcissus Paper White grandiflora from growers encouraged by recent high prices of cut flowers.

ALL Dutch bulbs are well cleaned up and the demand well over, Christmas trade occupying the attention of both growers and retailers.

CHARLES LOHRMAN, of the Lohrman Seed Co., Detroit, Mich., and wife, are at their winter home, Delray, Fla., where they will remain until Easter.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the arrival of John C. Bodger, Jr., at Los Angeles, Calif., Dec. 16, weight eight pounds. The happy father expects to start on an eastern trip after the holidays.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover closed 15 cents lower December 14 at $25.85, a gain of $1.25 during the week. Cash timothy was higher, selling at $5.32½; December, $5.32½; January, $5.37½ and May $5.47.

W. H. HUFFMANN, formerly of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, who has been in the officers' training school at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky., has now been released from military service.

VISITED CHICAGO: A. T. Ferrell, of A. T. Ferrell & Co., Saginaw, Mich.; W. A. Brotherton, representing Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Detroit, Mich.; Alling Woodruff, of S. D. Woodruff & Sons, Orange, Conn.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—All the seed houses report a very large advance retail demand for flower seeds, attributed to the fact that now that the war is over people can make their home surroundings attractive without being subject to criticism.

BOUQUET GREEN and holly were both scarce at Chicago this week, $10 to $12 per crate or case being the average price for good stock. Several lots of the former were sent to New York, from which point a few cases of holly were ordered expressed to dealers in the first-named city.

Seed Quality Investigations.

According to the bureau of plant industry of the United States department of agriculture, during the year, 16,838 samples of seed were received for test at the Washington laboratory and 11,349 at the five branch laboratories maintained in cooperation with state institutions. This is a somewhat larger number of samples than was tested in the previous year.

In the spring of 1918 seed of red clover and redtop was collected for examination for the presence of adulterants as well as to determine how fully the seed trade is complying with its agreement to label all field seeds with the percentage of pure live seed. This material will be examined and reported on later.

The enforcement of the seed-importation act has kept out of the country much forage-plant seed of poor quality, over 400,000 pounds of red-clover seed having been prohibited entry during the month of May, 1918. On account of the difficulties of trans-Atlantic shipment, imports of most kinds of seeds have fallen off, Canada bluegrass from Canada and winter rape from Japan being the only two items the imports of which have exceeded those of the previous year.

Interest increases in obtaining quality seed wheat of productive varieties. Inspection of growing fields of such varieties has been accomplished as follows: Kanred hard red winter wheat in Kansas; Iowa No. 404 hard red winter wheat in Iowa; Early Baart hard white wheat in Arizona and California. Seed from inspected fields is being eagerly sought in the states where grown.

Marquis, the leading hard red spring wheat, is now more widely grown than all other varieties combined. In 1914 it comprised only four per cent of the total spring-wheat crop in the principal states of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana. In 1917 it had increased to about 45 per cent, while in 1918 the proportion of Marquis in the total acreage of spring wheat in those states probably reached 65 to 70 per cent.

In the pursuance of a definite plan for seed-potato improvement, the bureau has taken initial steps to secure and develop high-grade seed potatoes which it is proposed to make available in small quantities to those desiring to start with a good strain. The method of procedure adopted was to secure the best strains of some of the leading commercial varieties in Minnesota and Wisconsin and to assemble and plant them at Grand Rapids, Minn., and Rhinelander, Wis. In the east an attempt was made to secure strains of high-grade seed stock from New York, Vermont, and Maine growers. These strains are being grown near Presque Isle, Me. Frequent inspections of the plants are to be made during the growing season, and all varietal mixtures and weak or diseased plants are to be removed.

Printers' Ink and Seed Guarantees.

Here is a mail-order seed house which guarantees its seeds—satisfaction or your money back, no matter how you treated them. Here is another mail-order seed house which does not guarantee its seeds at all, except that they are true to description. The buyer gets exactly what he orders, but if he plants them in brickdust and forgets to water them for a month, that is his funeral. You may say, if you like, that one policy is better business than the other, because in the long run it is likely to promote more good will and more profit. But the schoolmaster can not see where any moral obligation enters into it.

Trade Mark Not Considered Property.

The Supreme Court at Washington has declared there is no such thing as property in a trade mark, in a decision sustaining the right of the United Drug Company to sell and use a remedy which had been trade-marked under the name of "Rex."

MANY new gardeners grow radishes in too warm a temperature.

CANADA'S estimated production of potatoes in 1918 is 105,579,700 bushels as compared with 79,892,000 for last year. Roots also proved a record crop, turnips leading with 120,767,900 bushels.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, December 17.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $3.50 to $5.00; celery, crate, $1.00 to $1.10; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.00 to $2.50; radishes, per dozen bunches, 40 to 45 cents; tomatoes, 6 baskets, $6.00 to 6.50.

New York, December 16.—Celery (state) per bunch 40 to 75 cents; cucumbers, $1.00 to $3.00 per dozen; mushrooms, $1.25 to $1.85 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 12 to 25 cents; lettuce, per package, $1.25 to $4.00; radishes, per 100 bunches, $2.00 to $3.50.

Lettuce Plants.

Such a simple thing as lettuce, presents at times great difficulties in management if one gets on the wrong track. The wrong track at this time of the year is moisture on the foliage. There seems to be no end of growers who either have never learned this simple precaution, or neglect it at times. We must realize that at this time very little moisture is needed; the sun is powerless and the air that is admitted is often moisture laden. Thus, when we get ready to sow seeds of lettuce, we work the soil over several times to ascertain if it is uniformly moist all through. If not, we add moisture carefully until enough has been given to permit us to yet work the soil without sticking. In this condition it is levelled off, marked in two-inch rows and the seeds sown. No soil is used to cover; simply newspapers or cheesecloth. We sprinkle the cover daily until the seeds are well rooted and no more moisture is added until the plants are pricked out two by two. The same precaution is used in the plant beds, working the soil to ascertain its moisture content. As soon as the plants are pricked out, they are watered with a rose sprinkler to settle the soil, and this is all they get until they are ready for the final move. The same method can be followed in growing big lettuce—water the plants when set, cultivate and no more water until cut; that is, on solid beds. To some, who are used to frequent watering, this may sound "fishy," but to those we wish to say, better get busy and learn this method and see for yourself. Absence of water on foliage means generally absence of disease, that is, during the dark months. We have sold thousands of lettuce plants for years, and shipped them many hundred miles into a dozen different states or more, and the same story comes back: "best lettuce we ever grew." This is the result of the dry treatment. The dread lettuce mildew is caused simply by moisture too near to the surface, combined by soft foliage. Soft foliage is produced by frequent sprinkling and scanty ventilation. We want no "April showers" when growing lettuce under glass. Every time we wet the foliage, we court disaster. We may escape at times, but sooner or later weather conditions will combine with our showers and produce a loss. One of the ways to success these critical days is to avoid losses.

MARKETMAN.

Vegetable Markets.

The bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture, in its report of market conditions for the period, December 10-16, states that carrot movements declined considerably with values stronger. Most potato markets appeared rather draggy owing to liberal stocks on hand, but prices held fairly steady except in the north central section, where figures weakened. No. 1 Wisconsin sacked whites sold at $1.50-$1.60 per 100 pounds at Chicago. Eastern markets were nearly steady with New York bulk white stock ranging from $1.80-$1.98 f. o. b. Rochester. Prices in consuming markets were $2-$2.40. The demand for cabbage was slow, the losses about offsetting the gains of the previous week. New York Danish seed receded to a range of $18-$22 per ton at Rochester. Wisconsin Holland seed stock closed at $17-$19 at Waupaca. New Jersey and Maryland sweet potatoes ranged nearly steady at $2-$2.50 per bushel hamper. Celery markets maintained a strong tone. Lettuce also advanced, selling generally in consuming markets at $3.25-$4.50 per hamper. Onion markets showed little change. Choice yellow stock was firm at $1.50-$1.75 f. o. b. per 100 pounds sacked in New York and New England sections. Eastern and Middle-western sacked yellows ranged $1.25-$1.90 in leading consuming markets. Bean values were irregular with most changes in a downward direction.

VISITED CHICAGO: P. J. Lynch of the Dingee & Conard Co., New Castle Ind.

THE appeal of American importers against the regulations of the federal horticultural board has been forwarded to the Belgian legation at Washington.

THE proposed drastic embargo against Belgian, Dutch and French plants is a serious invasion of the long-established commercial rights of the horticultural public and without proven reasons.

Protection of Plants in Winter.

Effective winter protection consists of assistance rendered by man to nature in its effort to carry plants through the hardship of severe winters, but the attempts to afford protection to tender plants generally result in a waste of time and money, according to the October Bulletin of the Missouri Botanical Garden. Tender plants, being frozen, the roots cannot respond to the drain on the plant's system and the parts exposed to the action of the atmosphere consequently shrivel. The chief protection afforded trees and shrubs usually consists of a mulch four to six inches thick of well rotted manure, straw or other litter, placed over the roots when planted in the fall. If planting is to be delayed until spring, the trees or shrubs may be heeled in, the roots being laid in a hollow trench covered with well-drained sandy soil and later given a covering of straw. Where newly planted large trees need protection in order to gradually acclimate them to a colder climate, they should be given a mulch at the roots while the tops should be tied close to the main trunk, covered with a six inch thickness of straw or hay, and finally tied with burlap.

Among shrubs, the rhododendrons as a class require winter protection. When planted, a location sheltered from winds and midday sun should be selected. As cold weather sets in, a mulch of leaves 10 to 12 inches deep should be placed over the roots while tall evergreen boughs should be bent over the plants after being firmly stuck in the ground. Among the roses, hybrid perpetuals, hybrid teas, teas, etc., will not withstand our winters unless a measure of protection is afforded. The climbers, being largely offspring of the hardy Wichuriana and multiflora types, are comparatively hardy except during the severe cold as experienced last winter. To be sure of saving the entire cane growth and thus preserving the flower buds, the long canes should be laid down pegged to the ground and covered with a mulch of soil 10 inches deep combined with a light layer of manure on top.

A mere mat of straw placed around the canes on the trellis will be of little avail in severe weather. It is essential in covering the vines that no portion be left exposed otherwise the entire cane above the dead section will have to be removed nullifying the whole procedure. The tender roses should be protected by hilling loose soil around each plant to a depth of six to eight inches and mulching the entire beds with a three to four inch covering of well rotted straw manure. The mulch should be put on just before the continuous cold weather sets in and removed as soon as the sap commences to flow in the spring.

In loose sandy soils the herbaceous perennials require but little protection besides their natural covering of dead leaves and branches. However, a light mulch two or three inches deep placed over the perennial beds after

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

the ground has frozen is beneficial, particularly where heaving is liable to take place.

A somewhat different method of winter protection has been tried based on the theory that dark colors absorb heat while light colors reflect it. In the latitude of St. Louis winter killing of the peach fruit buds is usually due to freezing after being stimulated into growth by warm weather. This stimulus may be due entirely to warmth and be practically independent of root action. It has been found that fruit buds may safely endure 10 to 20 degrees below zero if well matured but if swollen by premature warmth, may be killed at zero. Several applications of whitening during the winter and spring have the benefit of reducing winter killing. Whitewash mixed with one pound of salt to every bucketful was the material used.

Tree Monuments.

No happier thought has ever taken possession of the minds of our people than that of planting trees as memorials to our fallen heroes. The practice, heretofore in vogue, of raising large sums of money for memorials to be erected in city squares or other public places, has always been open to criticism. Such memorials were never representative of all the people, because it was the richest people that usually made the largest contributions. And further, when the time had come to award the work to artists and sculptors, it was generally supposed that it was those persons who had given the most who had the greatest influence in placing the contracts. The results have sometimes been pitiful; sometimes scandalous.

We do not intimate that there are no good and appropriate memorials in this country, but it is a well known fact that many that have been erected are unsightly caricatures. A former park commissioner of New York once said in effect, that he wished he knew of some way to get rid of some of the "memorials" and "monuments" that littered up the parks. Skillful as some of our designers are, the trees were designed by a better Architect. In tree planting, every family can have its own memorial.

A. F. F.

Base Ball gives Way to Horticulture.

The park commissioners of New York seem to find it as hard to please people as the fuel administrators did last winter. Mention was recently made in these columns of the fall of Commissioner Grell. Now it is Commissioner Hennessy, of the Bronx, who is between two fires. In Crotona park there is a baseball field, and the commissioner proposes to plow it up and have it devoted to horticultural features. The commissioner is right. Baseball may be all right at the proper time and place, but in the heart of a residential section, it is a nuisance, particularly on Sunday. Aside from any religious consideration, though that should not be ignored, there are many men and women who want rest and peace on Sundays that they cannot have if a mob of baseball players and their clique are in the neighborhood.

Cleveland.CHRISTMAS SUPPLY WILL BE LIMITED.

From the present indications the supply of cut stock for the holidays will be rather limited, due largely to the dark weather of the past few weeks. Some of the sweet pea growers report that these conditions are causing the buds to fall. Poinsettias in pots and pans as well as cut blooms, are arriving in good supply. All other stocks are still short of the demand. Every day now sees florists from outside points in this city buying holiday requirements and looking after their supplies of flowering plants. The demand for southern smilax, ground pine roping and laurel wreathing has been good. Adiantum is scarce.

NOTES.

Albert E. Hart, formerly of Hart Bros., who has opened a very attractive establishment at 36106 Detroit avenue, Lakewood, has sent out a very neat folder announcing his opening, calling attention to the fact that "We may look this old world over and over again, yet never will find anything that quite expresses the beautiful sentiment of flowers."

Carl Wittuhn, son of Fred Wittuhn the East 25th street florist, who was gassed while serving with the American troops in France, writes that he is in a base hospital and is getting along nicely.

The sympathy of the trade goes out to F. A. Bramley, of Bramley & Son, florists at 1881 East 71st street, on the death of Mrs. Bramley, who died December 13, after giving birth to twins.

Cincinnati.GOOD BUSINESS AT PROFITABLE PRICES.

Business continues to be excellent. The demand is strong and prices are high, but the receipts are very limited. The supply of cut flowers for Christmas is bound to be very short. Plants, both flowering and foliage, are meeting with a big call and all the growers have about sold out their present supply. Few roses are available and the same is true of carnations. Easter lilies and callas help out somewhat. Poinsettias are fairly plentiful and of a high quality. They sell well. The same applies to stevia. Some snapdragons that come into the market are excellent and meet with a ready sale. Other offerings are violets, orchids, lily of the valley, forget-me-nots, baby primroses, calendulas and sweet peas.

NOTES.

C. E. Critchell, after his touch of the "flu," is back at his desk. Because of the rush of business and sickness in his force, he has had to put on extra help. G. Brunner Sons had the decoration for the farewell banquet to ex-Mayor Julius Fleischmann at the Gibson on Monday evening.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS

WE wish to grasp you by the hand with a warm and hearty handshake, and to personally extend to you greetings for the year's sweetest holiday—a yuletide with the world again at peace.

WE take this opportunity also to thank our patrons for the many courtesies shown us in the year 1918, and to say we too are grateful to the S. A. F. & O. H., the F. T. D. and the Florists Clubs of this country, who have done so much for the welfare of the florists' trade.

TO ALL we send expressions of jubilant happiness—here's a MERRY CHRISTMAS to you and yours.

HIGH PRICES MAY LIMIT SALES.

High prices prevail and will continue until after Christmas at least. Stock of all kinds is very scarce, especially carnations, which have been shy for some time. There has been a good supply of American Beauties which hold up well in price due to the general scarcity in other lines. Specials sold at 75 cents throughout the week. Carnations are quoted at $10 and $12 per 100. Roses range from $8 to $25, but the quality is very good, especially in Ophelia and the Killarneys. Some very good Russell are being received and sell well. Lilies and callas, both scarce, command $3 per dozen. Sweet peas are now arriving in more generous quantities and have a good call, the best price being $1.50 per 100. Lily of the valley moves well but only a small amount is available. Calendulas and pansies are both good stocks. Orchids are scarce. The supply houses are moving large volumes of Christmas goods and greens of all kinds. Prices in general for Christmas will be high, which may have a bad effect on the business of the future and customers will not buy at the extremely high prices asked. Holly and Christmas trees are now being received at the produce yards and are expensive compared with former years. The quality of the holly is good and it brings $6 to $7 per case.

NOTES.

Abe Krongold has opened a store in the Oliver building to take care of his Christmas business. It is well stocked with wreaths, baskets and holiday novelties.

Edw. Ludwig, who is with the United States ambulance service in France, has sent a number of orders for Christmas flowers to his father, E. C. Ludwig.

Sam Gidias has received his discharge from the army and is now with the Alpha Floral Co., on Penn avenue.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Tulips and Narcissus.

The Dutch bulbs are now in condition to bring into the houses, for they should be well rooted, and will force readily, and from the first of the year on the grower should regulate the culture of these so that there will be a continuous supply. The best way to accomplish this is to have one day in the week which is bulb day—that is, on this day the succeeding lots will be brought from where they are stored and placed in the greenhouses. The demand will, of course, fluctuate to some extent, but by looking back two or three years it will be found that the call for this stock is about in the same proportion every year, and a basis on which to figure about how many pots or boxes should be brought up can be obtained. If it is found that the stock is accumulating at any time, those that are not quite in bloom can be removed to a cooler house and retarded, and those that are almost in bloom, if moved into a shed where it is dark and quite cool, will last in splendid condition for a week or 10 days longer. For the present it will be necessary to put the pans and pots in a shaded position in order to get the proper length of stem. Those forced early if allowed to stand in a warm house in full sunlight, will open their flowers before they have attained good height, so it is well to place them under a bench or provide a place where they can be kept rather dark for a week. In cutting the flowers endeavor to cut them from the pans or boxes that have been in the houses the longest. A thoughtless man will cut into a box that is just opening and which would be good for a week or more, when there are plenty that could be cut that will not last nearly so long. There is always a great waste in growing bulbs and everything that is possible should be done to prevent it. On bulb day when the fresh lot is put on the bench those that were brought up three or four weeks before and are in full flower will be ready to be thrown out. Any flowers that may be on these boxes, if they are well in bloom, should be cut and placed in water. They will last much longer if cut and kept cool than they will if left on the bulbs in the greenhouses.

Poinsettias.

This is a Christmas plant pure and simple. It is to the midwinter holidays what the lily is to Easter and the sale of plants or flowers after the new year is very small and hardly remunerative. The plants that are left should at once be treated for stock plants. It is the custom of some growers to immediately place the pots under a bench and water them no longer. It is much better, however, to block them up closely in a warm house and gradually dry them off until the wood ripens and then store them away where they will be kept dry. When the plants are treated by the former method the green wood often dies down more than half the length, but by a slower ripening off many more and much better cuttings can be obtained. They can be laid down on their sides under a carnation bench where they will not receive any water, or if the pots are needed they can be heeled-in in such a location, and here they can remain until April, when they should be started for propagation, using either the old growth or starting the plants into growth and making the cuttings from the young shoots as they break from the old wood. With these it is better to make the cuttings with a heel and in a warm location they root quite easily.

Cleaning Up After Christmas.

The Christmas sales will give the plantsman an opportunity to give the houses a thorough overhauling and begin preparations for the Easter stock, and also more room for the plants that are to produce flowers during the winter. The probabilities are that the best plants have been disposed of, and the demand for the balance will slacken up considerably for the next two or three weeks. Any plants that will not be salable in the middle of the next month, especially if they are not of the best quality, had better be thrown away, and not allowed to remain taking up valuable space for a month or more, only to be discarded later. The stock plants should all be selected and preparations for next season's propagation begun. The old favorite Begonia incarnata is still grown by many. The old plants never make good stock for another year, so select enough to produce all the stock wanted, and discard the balance. It will be busy times where many plants are grown, but the quicker and earlier the work is done the better will be the resultant crops. The bulb stock is now ready to be brought in and all the room should be immediately filled up with stock that can be grown into plants that will find ready sale. It sometimes takes courage to throw away plants that look as if they would bring in something, but it is far better to do this, even if a plant is thrown out that might be sold, than to carry along a lot of stock that never turns in a cent to the money drawer.

Geraniums.

After the holiday trade there will be room enough to space out the geraniums and other bedding stock. The cuttings that were placed in flats, and the young stock in 2-inch pots, should be shifted to the 3-inch size and spaced on the benches so that a good growth is encouraged. As soon as well established in these pots the top can be cut off and another cutting obtained. All the young stock possible should be taken from the plants selected in the fall for propagating purposes, for all the cuttings from which it is expected to produce good sized plants should be in the propagating bench by February 1. Any rooted after March 1 will be small plants for bedding purposes. The best stock for late May and early June planting should be in 4-inch pots by April, that they may be well enough established by the middle of May to begin to flower, and should have at that time three or four good branches so that a succession of bloom is assured.

Lynch, Supreme Court Clerk.

P. J. Lynch, well known in connection with the rose growing establishments of The Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa., and The Heller Bros. Co., New Castle, Ind., takes office January 1 as clerk of the Supreme Court of Indiana, with offices at the State House, Indianapolis. For many years Mr. Lynch has labored incessantly in the interests of the republican party, and during recent months has devoted much of his time to war work, fully meriting the high honor which now comes to him. This fine judicial position usually holds about eight years. Mr. Lynch will retain the treasurer-ship of the business with which he is identified and has the heartiest congratulations of a host of friends in the trade, with best wishes for his continued success. In the election, he had a plurality of 48,000, which shows the high esteem in which he is held by his associates.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

A Happy and Prosperous New Year to all.

With the close of the year, all evidences of the holiday trade, which we trust has been very successful with all, should be removed, the decorations taken down and articles that can be used again packed away for use next year. An inventory should be at once made of all unsold stock that was purchased for the holiday trade, all of which that is good, should be carefully wrapped up, boxed and stored, to be brought out for the Christmas of 1919. Foliage plants may yet be sold, as well as basket stock, fern dishes and other standard items that are favorites all the year round.

While fresh in mind, a complete record of the holiday trade should be made. The purchase and preparation of the prepared leaves, immortelles, chenille and other stock material for cemetery designs, or for wreaths and other house decorations, should first be noted. The best sellers should be underscored, whether there were enough prepared during the summer season and helpful suggestions, the result of the season's experiences, written down.

The various quantities of plant stocks purchased, and from whom with date of time ordered, is an important matter. "First come, first served," is an excellent maxim; if there was disappointment caused by delay in this respect, make note, that it shall not occur next year.

The green goods department, holly, ground pine and nursery evergreens, their quantities, time of preparation, how they sold, etc., are worthy of elaboration.

Store decoration, how stocks were featured, improvements that suggest themselves now, may, and are likely to be forgotten by next year, if not recorded.

The advertising, the Christmas circular, copies of which should be filed, will make interesting reading when next year's preparations are under way.

How the delivery worked out, the wrapping and packing, routing, emergency cars, extra sales and delivery people, names and addresses of all who were satisfactory, should be written down and are then on file.

There are a number of other matters connected with the holiday business that should be on record, as for instance, cut flowers, the most expensive and difficult stock to handle. Quantities of the various flowers sold, and their prices, will, if recorded, be found a valuable reference. An inventory of unsold stock should also be included. With such a resume, bringing the business of the last season fresh to mind, it will be much easier to arrange and plan, when the time comes around again.

While the business incident to New Year's day has lost its old time energy, there are still some who celebrate with dinners and receptions, for which holiday decorations are in order. Poinsettias, red roses, red carnations and fresh, bright, well berried holly, will generally be found in good demand.

With the passing of stevia, and to a large extent, Easter lilies, both of which have filled a prominent place in the market the past month, it is wondered what will be drawn on to replace them. Russell roses, which have been an important factor all through the fall, together with Richmond, which will now be dormant for the next two months, there will be two varieties less in the rose section. Add to this a much greater scarcity of bulbous stock, with no lily of the valley, and it would seem as if the growers will find an active market at good prices for all their products until summer comes again.

Foliage in design work should be kept to the front. Fresh southern magnolia leaves make beautiful wreaths and require but few flowers to decorate. Green and bronze galax and leucothoe will also now be found invaluable. Some florists use cut boxwood to good advantage in connection with cut flower design work, all through the season. All this class of stock can and should be used to help out the shortened stocks of cut flowers. If artistically used, they will not only take the place of flowers, but also bring their price.

Calendulas will be good flowers to feature at this time; they are lasting, and look especially well when used with bright colored croton sprays in table decorations.

Sweet peas will soon be at their best and there is nothing common about the high grade orchid varieties. They are exquisite in coloring, form and fragrance. It is to be hoped that they will be seen in such quantities as to keep the price within reason.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—With a handsome arrangement of flowers and peace doves, the Drumm Seed & Floral Co. have one of the most attractive windows in the city in portraying the holiday spirit.

ORCHID NOTES.

December Orchids.

When the new ruling of plant exclusion becomes effective next June, the orchid end of the florist business will receive a knock-out blow. Even now, with the present difficulties to obtain a license for importing these plants from South America, the business may be said to be at an end. So it behooves all who have specialized in orchids to give extra attention to the future, or prepare to enter some other part of the florist business, and this will be found no easy task to do with the houses that it has been customary to turn into orchid houses. Only too often they have been the worst growing houses of the establishment. So the coming prospects for the orchid specialists are not very bright, and the only possible loop-hole out of the difficulty is to commence to raise cattleyas from seed artificially, though this practice among commercial growers is only in its infancy, so the above ruling is bound to make big changes and perhaps revolutionize the orchid trade entirely.

Although these notes on December orchids do not call for raising orchids from seed, with details of the work, yet it may be said that a very valuable cattleya hybrid may be obtained that comes into flower at this season, between the late flowering C. labiata and the early blooming, C. Trianae. It is Cattleya veriflora; a hybrid artificially raised between these two well known florist varieties. It may be said to be a much improved C. labiata. The flowers are of good size and substance, also it seems to grow with much freedom, and it is safe to say that a fine future is before this variety, coming into bloom as it does at what is known as the off season.

Another hybrid, crossed between C. Trianae and Laelia purpurata, known as L. C. Wellsiana, commands notice this month. The flowers are much above the average in size, which are always produced on stems one foot or more in length, and usually of good color, with fine keeping qualities. Cattleya Percivaliana is now in evidence, and to many who do not mind the peculiar odor, it is a favorite, but C. Trianae is the pick of them all as a general money maker. The season for this variety lasts three months or more, but to bring this orchid to perfection as a cut flower it must be well grown, and if the blooms are allowed to become well developed before they are cut, it will last six or eight days in a warm living room.

Laelia Goldiana, perhaps the brightest colored laelia grown, is in its glory at this season. This variety is claimed to be a natural hybrid between L. anceps and L. autumnalis, but is a great improvement on either variety, and unlike the most of this family of orchids, it lasts a long time after being cut. Anyone buying this variety once, will be sure to ask for it again. It cannot be beaten as a decorative orchid. Laelia anceps, with its numerous varieties, makes a great show this month. Fortunately, the highly colored varieties are now at their best. Earlier in the season, about Thanksgiving, the fine light variety, L. anceps Percivaliana is in its prime and the white varieties are at their brightest early in the year. These light forms give much better service as cut flowers than the colored types. Laelia autumnalis with alba and L. acuminata are all useful at this season. Their long stems making them most decorative. Oncidium splendendum, O. Cavendishianum, with tigrinum and O. Forbesii, form an interesting variety for change in color. Calanthe Veitchii and C. Sanderiana make most useful cut flowers during December. Also there are a few late Dendrobium phalaenopsis around. This with D. superbum make very graceful and lasting cut flowers. Some few Phalaenopsis amabilis come in useful, but it must be said for this species to live up to its name as the "queen of orchids," it must be allowed to become fully developed before it is cut.

This month brings forth a big collection of cypripediums. The once valuable C. insigne Sanderæ is now coming into its own. Twenty-seven years ago there was one known plant of this fine yellow insigne. Now they may be bought in 1,000 lots. The flowers bring about 50 cents each, while the common type sell two for a quarter. Insigne Harefield Hall is another good seller. This is finer and larger than the old type of C. insigne. Then the hybrids such as C. Lceanum and C. Lathamianum can all be had in quantity in December. Though cypripediums are not as showy as cattleyas, they have many friends who see much beauty in them besides having lasting qualities of about three weeks in a dwelling room. This makes them favorites also, and when all is said and done, it is this orchid family that will be on top in years to come because under conditions that many of the cattleyas have been grown without new importations, there may be nothing left only the name, so it is safe to take warning of what may come.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

Summary of the Season.

Now that the chrysanthemum season is closing, it is a good plan to check up the results and figure ahead for another season. The growers who had good stock are well satisfied with the returns for the crop of 1918. There was a steady demand, using up the blooms before they were fully matured, so that at no time were there any overripe flowers remaining on the benches, and when the cost of labor and care that it takes to grow a house of chrysanthemums is taken into consideration, the average prices obtained were more nearly fair than they have been for several seasons. Several causes contributed to these results. One was the unprecedented demand for flowers during the epidemic of the flu, creating a great shortage of all kinds of flowers during October. Another reason was the shortage of labor to propagate and care for the plants during the late spring and summer months so that many growers who have been accustomed to plant a bench or two of the large kinds of chrysanthemums, reduced their plantings and replaced them with pompons, which are more easily taken care of. And last, but not least, is the general popularity of the chrysanthemum during its season. Naturally, when people require flowers they want the most popular and showy then in season, and we noticed an increased call over other years for a bunch of fine blooms to send to a sick friend, which could not have been wholly attributed to the prevailing epidemic.

Growers who were wise enough in their plantings to add some of the bronzes and other colors, as well as the white, yellow and pinks, obtained much the best results, some of these colors seeming to gain more popularity each season, especially the incurred golden bronze varieties. From a grower's standpoint, the growing season for the plants was mostly favorable. September being the most unfavorable period, the cold, dark, rainy days, one following another, made it very difficult for the plants to ripen wood and set buds properly. During the time the plants were in bloom, the weather was much more favorable, dry and warm, but still not hot enough to cause any serious damping of the petals. Airing of the houses could be freely done each day and very little fring was necessary to mature the blooms.

POMPONS.

The pompon, or button type of chrysanthemums, seem to be growing in favor with each year, particularly the well formed, rich colored varieties. They are being appreciated more and more for their decorative effect and lasting qualities as well as for the many ways they can be used in floral arrangements. Outside of the rose specialists, there are very few greenhouses growing flowers, where a batch of pompons are not grown. They are easy to grow and well repay for the care and space devoted to them.

In looking over any of the large markets at the height of the season, one is very apt to think the pompon business is overdone, and wonder where they all go to, but the demand is enormous, though there is a great danger of it being overdone by so many varieties being grown that really should not be classed as pompons at all, but irregular smaller forms of the large flowered type of chrysanthemum. The cut per bunch on these plants should be figured up as well as the large types. Not all pompons are profitable alike, some of them throwing a large number of blind shoots to each plant. Those that produce a fair average of good sprays are by far the most profitable. Several growers are growing a number of pompons each year in disbudded form, one flower to a stem, four or five stems to the plant. Varieties like Lillian Doty, that produce their flowers in a close mass at the end of the stem, are best suited for disbudding, while varieties like Golden Climax and Hilda Canning that have a more natural spray effect are not so suited for this purpose.

CARE OF STOCK PLANTS.

After the cut blooms are all out of the way, the stools or stock plants should be given attention so as to keep them clean, healthy, and in good shape to produce cuttings for propagating.

First of all, figure up the number of plants for your requirements, then select the strongest and cleanest stools, being careful in the selection that none are saved that were weaklings or diseased plants. A bench with full light in a house where a low temperature is carried, is the most suitable place for the stock plants. They do not have to be set as far apart as they have been during their growing season, but can be closed up, leaving a few inches between each stool so that the cuttings will not become crowded and spindly. Work the soil firmly around the plants so that the offshoots will have something to root into. Another method of carrying over the stock plants is to set them close together in shallow flats. This is the plan most generally followed, because it allows for the flats to be moved around as the space is needed, but whichever method is pursued, the plants should receive just as much care as any other stock on the place. It is a serious mistake to set them away, under benches, until it becomes time for propagating again, and only weak, sickly cuttings can result from plants treated in this manner. Another very important consideration is to be sure to have the plants where they can be kept under control and free from insects. They should be held a little to the dry side over the dark days of winter so that the cuttings will not lengthen out before needed.

Ohio University Short Course.

For those who are not fitted with the proper preparatory work for the four-year course in college, or those who have attended college, but have always wished for a little more education, Ohio State University, Columbus, offers an eight weeks' course which starts January 6 and continues through farmers' week, which is filled with talks and demonstrations by leaders. Special courses are offered for the sons and daughters of florists in gardening, commercial floriculture, fruit growing, soils and various other allied subjects. The tuition amounts to merely the payment of several small fees for laboratories. It is estimated that the course should not cost a provident student over $60. Write for information to E. G. Watson, secretary of College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, Columbus.

New Plant Quarantine Regulations.

Having received the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the new plant quarantine regulations recommended by the federal horticultural board and known as Notice of Quarantine No. 37, summary of which appeared in our issue of December 14, page 978, becomes effective on and after June 1, 1919. The new order governing the importation into the United States of nursery stock and other plants and seeds, supercedes the restrictions now in force governing nursery stock and brings under restriction all other plants and plant products under the following regulations:

(1) The words "nursery stock and other plants and seeds" used throughout the rules and regulations and rules and regulations supplemental thereto, include field-grown florists' stock, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, grafts, scions, buds, fruit pits and other seeds of fruit and ornamental trees or shrubs, also field, vegetable and flower seeds, bedding plants and other herbaceous plants, bulbs and roots and other plants and plant products for or capable of propagation.

(2) The following nursery stock and other plants and seeds, not including, however, the particular nursery stock and other plants and seeds which are governed by special quarantines and other restrictive orders now in force nor such as may hereafter be made the subject of special quarantines, may be imported without permit or other compliance with these regulations:

(a) Fruits, vegetables, cereals and other plant products imported for medicinal, food or manufacturing purposes; except Irish potatoes, prohibited from all countries except Canada and Bermuda, but which may be imported from any foreign country into the territories of Hawaii and Porto Rico, for local use only free of any restrictions.

Quarantines now in force prohibit the entry of the following fruits: Oranges, sweet limes, grape fruit, mangoes, peaches, guavas and plums from Mexico; all species and varieties of citrus fruits from eastern and southeastern Asia, the Malayan archipelago, the Philippine Islands, Oceania, (except Australia, Tasmania and Union of South Africa; fruits of the avocado or alligator pear and avocado nursery stock less than 18 months old from Mexico and the countries of Central America.

(b) Field, flower and vegetable seeds.

(3) The following nursery stock and other plants and seeds, not including, however, those governed by special quarantines or other restrictive orders now in force, nor such as may hereafter be made the subject of special quarantines, when free from sand, soil or earth, may be imported from countries which maintain inspection, under permit upon compliance with the regulations, but where a particular purpose is specified, for that purpose and no other:

(a) Lily bulbs, lily of the valley, narcissi, hyacinths, tulips and crocus.

(b) Stocks, cuttings, scions and buds of fruits for propagation.

CATTELEYA LABIATA.

Extra Fine Variety with Pure White Sepals and Petals.

(c) Rose stocks for propagation, including manetti, multiflora, briar rose and rosa rugosa.

(d) Nuts, including palm seeds, for propagation.

(e) Seeds of fruit, forest, ornamental and shade trees, seeds of deciduous and evergreen ornamental shrubs, and seeds of hardy perennial plants.

Importations of nursery stock and other plants and seeds specified in this regulation, from countries not maintaining inspection, may be made under permit upon compliance with the regulations in limited quantities for experimental purposes only, but this limitation shall not apply to tree seeds.

Persons contemplating the importation of nursery stock or other plants and seeds covered by the above regulation shall first make application to the federal horticultural board for a permit stating in the application the exact destination of the items to be imported, the name and address of the exporter, the country and locality where grown, the port of entry, and the name and address of the importer in the United States to whom the permit should be sent. Permits shall be valid until revoked unless otherwise specified therein, and will be issued for the ports of Boston, New York, Newark, San Francisco, Seattle and such others as may from time to time be approved by the federal horticultural board.

Notice of quarantine No. 37, with regulations, may be had upon application to the federal horticultural board, Washington, D. C., together with the report of that body covering the principal lines of work followed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

LIMITED STOCK AT HIGH PRICES.

From all indications and from past experiences, the present Christmas is going to be one long to be remembered as regards the limited amount of stock offered and the prices asked and received. As high as 20 cents for carnations is the quotation of some of the wholesalers with sweet peas at $5 per 100, violets $3 and lilies $25. These four items are perhaps boosted higher in proportion than other stock when the normal figures are taken into consideration. However, there will not be enough stock to supply the demand and the wholesalers will be closed all day Christmas and possibly at the usual hour on the day previous if they can get the supply in time to deliver it. All boxwood has been cleaned up and holly is scarce. Mistletoe is in good demand as is southern smilax.

Insecticide Prices Reduced.

Chemical advice has been given by the United States department of agriculture to the food administration, and much valuable data have been supplied to it relative to manufacturers engaged in making certain types of insecticides and the importance or nonimportance of various insecticidal materials. A representative of the insecticide and fungicide board has attended several conferences between the food administration and manufacturers and has been able to supply data of value. As a result of the activities of the food administration, assisted by the department, the price of arsenic asked by the producer has been reduced from 12 to 16 cents to nine cents for carload lots and nine and one half cents for shipments less than a carload. This presumably will lead to a reduction in the price of Paris green, lead arsenate, and other arsenical insecticides to the consumer.

National Publicity for Flowers.

During the months of January and February, our committees have arranged to run a series of six advertisements through about 28 magazines of national circulation, some being given three insertions, and others two. One insertion through the whole list will give us an aggregate circulation of 10,000,000 without taking into consideration the fact that the number of readers, as generally computed, will provide a circulation at least four times as great. The other insertions will be in the same proportion.

To get the full benefit of this widespread publicity, florists who are wise, will connect their establishments with the magazine advertising by running replicas of these advertisements in their local newspapers, over their own names. To make this possible, our promotion bureau is preparing electro-types, to fit a two column space in any newspaper, which are reproductions of the magazine advertisements. Each carries our slogan, "Say it with Flowers" as a display headline, and a suitable illustration, with one of the following subheads to appropriate reading matter: "For Weddings," "On St. Valentine's Day," "For the Sick Room," "On Her Birthday," "On His Birthday," and "For Gifts."

The plates occupy less space than those previously put out by the bureau, and may be used as auxiliaries to the other series. Proofs of the plates and other information regarding this publicity may be had upon request made to the secretary.

Start the New Year well by connecting personal effort with the efforts of the committees, and the demand for flowers is sure to increase. In the year just closing, the beneficial results of the campaign publicity have been surprisingly noticeable, and with all dark clouds behind us and a clear business horizon before us, he would indeed be a pessimist who could doubt the efficacy of a strong, vigorous and lasting campaign for publicity for flowers.

Contributions toward the expense of the 1919 campaign are now most welcome. Make a decision to help us, one of your New Year's resolutions.

JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

Plant Restrictions Need Modification.

With the stamp of approval of the United States department of agriculture affixed to the plant quarantine regulations recommended by the federal horticultural board governing the entry of nursery stock and other plants and seeds, under the order known as Notice of Quarantine No. 37, which becomes effective June 1, 1919, the horticultural interests of this country are brought face to face with restrictive measures that threaten the future trade in palms, azaleas, bay and box trees, etc. With various countries upon whom we have relied in the past for many of our supplies in both nursery stock and bulbs, maintaining highly organized inspection service, and the time necessary to produce a stock to meet American requirements, it was hoped that regulations less severe would suffice until a reasonable period had elapsed after the war to enable the horticultural interests of the country, both commercial and private, to readjust themselves. All appeals, however, have been in vain. There is hope, nevertheless, that proper presentation of the situation through diplomatic channels and proposed counter concessions, may lessen to some extent the severity of the order. Every effort should be made by all interested to secure an early modification of the restrictions to something less sweeping. Carry on!

School Garden Association.

A special meeting of the School Garden Association of America will be held in Chicago, February 27-28, 1919, and a special meeting of the organization has also been called to convene at Baltimore, Md., December 23-24, at which the matter of an association organ will be discussed, the publication of Outdoor Education having been temporarily suspended.

At the eighth annual meeting of the association held in Pittsburgh, Pa., July 3, 1918, Dr. J. H. Francis, director of the United States School Garden Army, was elected president. The other officers are: Van Evrie Kilpatrick, New York, vice-president; E. P. Murphy, Richmond, Ind., secretary; Dr. Nellie P. Hewins, Elmhurst, N. Y., treasurer.

OBITUARY.

D. Mendels.

D. Mendels, of the firm of Freyling & Mendels, well-known florists and nurserymen of Grand Rapids, Mich., died at his home in that city, December 18, age 60 years. Death followed an illness of only two days, although the deceased had been a sufferer for the past four years but had been at his work until the Monday before he was stricken.

Mr. Mendels was both in the Netherlands in 1850 and came to this country at the age of 20. He had been engaged in floriculture since 1875 and in 1880 started the above named firm with Nicholas Freyling, the latter dying 14 years ago and his son, Edward N. Freyling, succeeding to his father's interests. The deceased, who is survived by a widow and one married daughter, was a man of high principles and exemplary habits, which marked a successful business career. He was a prominent member of the Reformed church and was zealous in its interests and philanthropies.

Walter Hines Page.

Walter Hines Page, late American ambassador to Great Britain, who died at Pinehurst, N. C., December 21, age 63, will be remembered chiefly by agriculturists and horticulturists as a man who was interested in their work. A native of North Carolina, it was while editor of a Raleigh, N. C., newspaper that he started the movement that resulted in the founding of an agricultural college for his state. The publishing firm of Doubleday, Page & Co., in which he was for years a prominent figure, must be credited with a number of useful publications on gardening and kindred topics. A. F. F.

Mrs. Mina Berning.

The sympathy of a host of friends, both in and outside the trade, is extended to H. G. Berning, the prominent wholesaler of St. Louis, Mo., in the death of his mother, Mrs. Mina Berning, who passed to rest, December 15, after a long illness. Mrs. Berning was held in high esteem by all who knew her, and her friends were many as evidenced by the handsome floral tributes that accompanied her remains to their last resting place in St. Marcus cemetery.

August Schell.

August Schell, age 43 years, landscape gardener, of Greenwich, Conn., died in the Bridgeport hospital December 22. He was injured by a fall in a greenhouse on the estate of John Morrison December 7, 1918. His widow, two daughters, three sisters and a brother survive.

Jacob Eisenberg.

Jacob Eisenberg, a florist of Astoria, N. Y., died December 19, of typhoid pneumonia. He was about 30 years old. He is survived by a widow, two children, his father, I. H. Eisenberg, a New York retailer, and by other relatives. A. F. F.

Vinca Rosea.

A plant that is often lost sight of by many for summer bedding is Vinca rosea, and it makes a most beautiful plant, being covered with flowers all through the summer until frost. The great cause of there not being much stock of these is that the seed is not sown early enough. December or early January is the time to plant the seeds of these plants to have them in fine srape for bedding out in June. Plants started early and grown in a warm house will be in flower at the time of planting and continue a mass of bloom throughout the season. The seed should be sown in flats which should be placed in a house having a temperature 65° to 70°. When the second leaf forms they should be pricked out into other flats about an inch apart and when they have five or six leaves potted in 2-inch pots, later being shifted into the 3-inch size. The soil should be of a sandy nature both in the potting and in the bed, if possible, but they will grow well outside in a heavy loam. They can be had in white, rose pink and pink with white eye, and come very true to color from seed.

HEAVY CHRISTMAS DEMAND.

The Christmas demand was very heavy this year, and up to the time of going to press, Tuesday, December 24, everything was cleaning up early at high prices compared to former years. The shipping trade was particularly heavy, and owing to the short supply of roses and stock in general, many orders were refused entirely or only partly filled as conditions permitted. Some of the growers resorted to the old-time practice of holding or "pickling" their stock with the result that roses, which should have been shipped in several weeks ago, arrived the latter part of the last week in such condition that it was almost unsalable. Why a grower would "pickle" under such conditions as have prevailed here for the past six months, is something the writer cannot understand, for prices were fully as good when the stock should have been cut as they were when the stock arrived, but which "sold for a song," and it was a shame to take the money at that. The weather was anything but favorable for the grower all last week, when it was warm and cloudy, and the only consolation one had was that very little coal was needed and meant a big saving in the fuel bills. American Beauty roses were in short supply and fancy home-grown stock sold for $12 to $18 per dozen. Good roses in general brought very satisfactory returns and found ready buyers. Carnations sold well at prices ranging from $10 to $15 per 100, with a few Laddie and Pink Sensation bringing $18 and $20 per 100. Carnation did not move as quickly as some of the dealers thought they would at some of the advertised prices, and to sum up the market on this item, it might best be explained that they were plentiful at $15 to $20 per 100, somewhat scarce at $12 to $15 per 100, but even then some were sold in larger lots at lower prices. Split carnations brought $8 per 100, which is high considering the large quantity that reached the market the past week. Sweet peas moved at $3 to $4 per 100, and in one or two instances, at $5. Orchids and gardenias brought the advertised prices, and lily of the valley cost the buyers $8 to $10 per 100. Poinsettias sold at prices ranging from $2 to $7.50 per dozen and freesias as high as $1.50 per bunch of one dozen spikes. White and yellow narcissi were in good demand at $10 to $12 per 100, and in a few instances $15. Lilies and callas were, as usual, good property, and a few late chrysanthemums and pompons were disposed of at surprisingly good figures. Mignonette, snapdragons, single and double stocks, pansies, calendulas, violets, stevia and other miscellaneous flowers brought high Christmas prices, and like everything else, was pretty well cleaned up Tuesday noon. Green goods had a heavy call, especially boxwood, which was scarce at times during the week and obtainable only in bunch lots. Holly was scarce the greater part of last week, when it sold on the street at $9 and $10 per case, but was plentiful December 21 at $4.50 to $5 per case, owing to the arrival of several large delayed shipments. Red winter-berries were exceedingly scarce, but California and southern holly furnished a splendid substitute and brought unexpected prices. Artificial stock played an important part in the Christmas demand this year and was practically cleaned up before the week was over. Plants were in fair supply, but it was impossible to fill anywhere near the demand for cyclamen, poinsettias, azaleas, etc. Taking everything into consideration, the Christmas trade from the wholesaler's standpoint, was one of the best ever experienced and will help to some extent to offset the losses of the large growers earlier in the season. NOTES.

August Poehlmann, who has been confined to his home with the Spanish influenza, is able to be about again. His son, Roland, who is one of Professor Dornier's students in the floriculture class at Urbana, is home for the holidays. His son, Earl, who is at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark., was unable to secure a leave of absence during the holidays and was greatly missed by the rest of the family.

William Reed, formerly with the W. W. Barnard Co. and later with the A. L. Randall Co., is visiting friends here. He was with the British expeditionary forces and ready to leave for the front when the armistice was signed. He was granted an honorable discharge from the army and is glad to be a civilian again.

John Poehlmann was granted an honorable discharge from the army in time to spend his eleventh Christmas at Poehlmann Bros. Co.'s store. He was commanding officer of the 81st Co., 21st Receiving Battalion, at Camp Pike, near Little Rock, Ark., where he had charge of 200 colored soldiers.

Roy Wilcox, of J. F. Wilcox & Son, Council Bluffs, Ia., who has been with the colors at Washington, D. C., was a visitor at Bassett & Washburn's store, December 23. He has received an honorable discharge and is ready to get back in the harness again.

George Bishop, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., a buver in this market, received a letter from George Pandell, of that city, from France, in which he stated he had the misfortune of losing an arm while in action the day before the armistice was signed.

Henry Arnold, formerly with O. A. & L. A. Tonner, who was recently transferred from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station to an eastern port, is back again to where he was shipped from, reaching here December 22.

Lieutenant Fred Haeger, formerly with the A. L. Randall Co., who is stationed at Camp Grant, Rockford, is home for the holidays. Henry Dollberg and Ed Southerberg of the same firm are home on a furlough.

The name of the firm of Kyle & Foerster will be changed to Joseph Foerster Co. on and after January 1, 1919.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. report that Louis Ancrola, who was formerly in their employ, writes that he is recovering at an American base hospital in France from the effects of being gassed at the front some time ago.

Dr. Arthur Spickermann, son of Mrs. Frances Spickermann, proprietor of the Sandwich Greenhouses at Sandwich, was honorably discharged from the army. He was stationed at Ft. Sheridan.

Paul Klingsporn, manager of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, acknowledges a visit from J. Smith, of A. W. Smith & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Henry L. Esterlund, one of the A. L. Randall Co.'s former employees, who has been with the colors for some time, has been given an honorable discharge.

A good supply of the chrysanthemum Hamburg's Late White is obtainable in this market. The best sold for as high as $9 per dozen this week.

Zech & Mann greatly missed the services of Michael Freres during the holidays, he being confined to his home with the Spanish influenza.

A heavy snowstorm visited this vicinity December 24 and will no doubt have considerable effect on the late Christmas demand.

George Wittbold, son of Henry Wittbold, has been honorably discharged from the army with a grade of first lieutenant.

William Engelhart, of the Idlewild Nurseries, Memphis, Tenn., was a visitor at Peter Reinberg's store during the week.

Charles O. Wilcox, representing Wood-Stubbs Co., Louisville, Ky., is spending the holidays with his family here.

Cliff Pruner was elected to membership in the Elks the past week and is scheduled to ride the goat January 2.

Steve Slock, an employee in Joseph Ziska & Sons' wire department, died last week from the Spanish influenza.

Ed. Hauswirth, who is now located at McHenry, is on the job at Archie Spencer's for the holidays.

The Lombard Floral Co. will add another house, 40x250 feet, to its range at Lombard.

George Ball, of Glen Ellyn, will leave for a ten-day trip east after the holidays.

"That 1919 Will Be the Happiest and Most Prosperous Year You and Yours Ever Enjoyed."

In Regard to the Market Condition, stock in general is none too plentiful but we are sparing no effort to fill all orders that are entrusted to us, which means that if it is obtainable in this market you have just as good a chance to receive it here as anywhere else. We carry a complete line of Cut Flowers, particularly Roses and Carnations as well as all Green Goods.

For Your Supply of CUT FLOWERS

 Remember when ordering that our line is so complete that it includes every item offered in the Great Chicago Market.

T. E. Waters is completing arrangements for the Victory banquet to be held by the Florists' Club in the Bluebird room of the Hotel Randolph, January 9. Everyone in the trade is cordially invited to be present and are requested to bring the ladies for there will be plenty of music and dancing. Tickets will be $2.50 each and everyone who expects to attend should make reservations immediately so the necessary arrangements can be made for all. Be sure and be there, for it will be an evening long to be remembered.

Wietor Bros.' shipments arrived late on December 24 on account of the heavy snowstorm that day. Many of the other houses experienced the same trouble, but managed to please everyone notwithstanding the delay.

J. A. Budlong had a heavy shipping business for the holidays and managed to take pretty good care of his customers, notwithstanding the extreme scarcity of stock.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. have no complaint to make in regard to their Christmas trade, which was good considering the unusual conditions prevailing this year.

Harold Amling, who is a student at the Culver Military Academy, gave the regular force a lift at the E. C. Amling Co.'s store during the holiday rush.

Allie Zech is anxiously awaiting the return of Zech & Mann's employees who are with the colors and whose jobs are awaiting them.

Percy Jones, Inc., reports a splendid Christmas business with a heavy out-of-town demand.

San Francisco.

GREAT CHRISTMAS TRADE ANTICIPATED.

The florists here are face to face with the most acute shortage in Christmas stock in many years. This applies particularly to cut flowers. Even at this early date the demand is far in excess of the supply and the growers and wholesalers are not holding out any hope for an increase for a long time to come. As one of the leading florists of this city told the writer, "We will just about have enough flowers to last about two hours Christmas day." Roses, which at this time of the year are in most demand, were never so hard to procure. The prices have soared away above the expectations of the growers. Florists are willing to pay any price for rose stock, but nothing like an adequate supply can be seen in sight. Mrs. Charles Russell is very good just now and averaging extremely high prices. American Beauties, the first of the season, were to be had in limited quantities in the early part of the week and brought very high figures also. Ophelia is the leading pink, closely followed by Shawyer. Red roses are very scarce. Cecile Brunner has almost disappeared from the market. In chrysanthemums, the heavy frosts have killed everything outdoors. A few Appleton are still to be had and I might add some excellent Helen Frick. This is undoubtedly the finest late pink variety for this vicinity. A few singles are noted in some of the stores. Violets are coming in slowly, owing to the frosty weather. Prices are high and the bunches offered are very small. We noticed some excellent Marie Louise this week, but it is not to be had in any quantity. Carnations are very scarce. Prices have gone skyward on this flower also. Growers who stuck to this old flower should realize handsomely this season on their crop. Gardenias are in very short supply and of rather poor quality. Some sweet peas were seen at a few of the stores, but they were all off color. Poinsettias are in great abundance and bid fair to have a banner season. Prices are high on these, also, owing to the shortage of all other stock. Most of this stock comes from the south, although the home grown flowers bring much higher prices, owing to the large bracts. Cattleyas are not very much in evidence and are in firm demand at stiff prices. Small Chinese grown chrysanthemums are not much in evidence this season, owing to the unfavorable weather. Most of the stores have decided to push plant sales this season, due to the cut flower shortage. Cyclamens are beginning to become popular, especially the red and salmon shades. There will not be enough to go around, however. Ericas are going before the public more prominently than ever this Christmas and no doubt will be among the best sellers. Begonias are not going to be plentiful. As yet no holly in pots or tubs is to be seen. Cattleyas in pots will be offered by many of the leading retailers. Boston ferns in variety promise to be in ample supply. Cibotiums and aspleniums are also in fine demand. Boxwood is scarce. Northern grown holly is arriving freely, but much of it comes damaged, owing to the long shipping distance. Local grown stock brings high prices. California red berries are very plentiful this year and constitute about the only stock in trade that the street vendors have to offer. There is no question but that prices will be the highest known in this market for many years.

NOTES.

Pelicano, Rossi & Co.'s store was the center of much interest this week, owing to the beautiful brasso-cattleyas from the greenhouses of John Carbone, which were on show. They were of wonderful size and coloring, several of which were seedlings raised by Mr. Carbone. Mr. Pelicano is looking forward to a heavy business in plants and is arranging his supply accordingly. They are handling a large cut of Cypripedium insigne daily.

The new store opened up at 148 Kearney street by Shellgrain & Ritter is presenting a fine appearance these days. Mr. Shellgrain was for many years Manager of the J. E. Boland store on Kearny street. They are making elaborate preparations for the Christmas season and have secured a very large store and a fine location.

The MacRorie-McLaren store on Powell street is showing a grand lot of flowering plants for the holidays.

Their begonias and cyclamens are very fine. Their poinsettias are much superior to the stock from the south. Manager Hoff expects that this will be the heaviest season in the firm's history.

John H. Sievers, who is now manager of the J. B. Boland store on Kearny street, reports a very steady demand for all holiday stock. He is having the store decorated in a very artistic manner for the holidays. His firm is specializing this year in home grown holly and have a fine lot to offer.

Manager J. A. Axell, of the E. W. McLellan Co. says the holiday prospects for cut flowers are not very encouraging and says there will not be anywhere near enough to go around.

BEST DEMAND IN YEARS EXPECTED.

The eve of the "battle for flowers" finds the local trade well prepared to meet the onslaught and while there may be a slight shortage in the cut flower line, there is splendid preparedness as far as plants are concerned, among them cyclamens, narcissi, both white and yellow, solanums, baby rambles and a variety of ferns. The stores are also well prepared with wreaths for which there has been a fine call, both for home and cemetery decoration.

Great quantities of holly have been sold on the streets. Carnations will sell for $2 and $3 per dozen, an unheard of price in previous years, but they are very scarce. Roses will also be higher than usual, although there will be a fair number of them offered. Many will also be sold in pots. The Christmas demand opened strong in spite of cold, disagreeable weather accompanied by rain.

NOTES.

The Joy Floral Co. had their usual good arrangement of stock, the pot plants arranged on staging so that each showed to advantage. Their cut of flowers has been excellent, with not a few orchids and calendulas. Birch boxes, cleverly arranged, brought good prices.

L. H. Haury & Son have a limited supply of cut stock, but were prepared to fill all demands for roses and carnations. In pot plants the offerings include a few baby rambles in the general good assortment.

Geny Bros. are well pleased with their Christmas trade, which surpassed expectations. Solanums were a feature

SUPPLY IN LIMITED ASSORTMENT.

The past week has been generally that of final preparations for the great culmination of the business which comes in the rush of December 23-24. There has been very encouraging signs all through the week, particularly in the last three days, when the stock sold and orders received have almost if not quite equaled, and some retailers declared, exceeded those of last year. In all the large shops, there appears to be superficially as large an assortment as ever, but when analyzed, various lines are seen to fall short both in quantity and quality. Poinsettias, as a rule, do not show the vigor and are fully 30 per cent less in amount. There are practically no azaleas, no red berried aucubas, and very few ardisias. Cyclamens are not as well flowered, although there were some fine specimens. It is said that not over 50 per cent of the stock was sufficiently in bloom to be salable for the holidays. Palms, pandanus, dracaenas, crotons, and all varieties of ferns were prominent in all the stocks, as were well arranged baskets and boxes, in which bright colored foliage was made to take the place of the missing flowers. Wholesale prices of plants averaged at least 20 per cent higher, which of course was passed on to the public, and as far as the early buying was concerned, appeared to make little difference to those who could afford and appeared to expect to have to pay more. The smaller stores, whose main business throughout the year is for funerals, made a great display of all kinds of wreaths, of which Jap red chenille and bronze magnolia were the foundations. All were more or less elaborately decorated, and early reports indicated, in better demand than ever. Baskets, large and small, of all kinds of prepared Christmas materials were also seen in large quantities and being pushed to take the place of both cut flowers and plants. The demand for cut flowers was light, and the stock carried in all but the largest stores was very small, as the extremely high prices made the waste, if any, very expensive. When from three to four dollars a dozen has to be asked for carnations, just the ordinary kinds, the usual price of which is $1.50, it brings, particularly from the small stores patrons, strong protests from the other side of the counter that are most discouraging and take a lot of explaining to smooth out. All kinds of Christmas greens are much higher, and yet the streets and the stores are apparently quantities of loose holly and holly wreaths. Some of the holly is very poor, yet cases of well berried stock are seen. Prices on the wharf or in produce commission houses opened at $7 to $8 a case. Three dollars was a good price a couple of years ago. Later it dropped to $6, at which much of it was sold. Lycopodium and boxwood brought 20 cents per pound through the regular channels and fancy box even higher. Prices of cut flowers were a problem until the last; in most cases the figures of the past two weeks prevailed, $12 to $15 for carnations, with reds and fancies as high as $20. There were no roses under $8. Six-inch each, with violets, single and double, at $1.50 to $2 per hundred. Sweet peas helped out, there being a good supply of fine quality at from $2 to $4 per hundred. Quantities of asparagus from Florida was a great factor. What the market would do without this supply is a question. It arrives now in very good condition. Several good crops of Easter lilies were timed right for the week, and even at the high figure of $25 seem to be in active demand. Stevia of good quality jumped to 50 cents per bunch.

NOTES.

A. B. Cartledge thinks that at the figures prevailing for the past few months, growers should be making a good margin of profit. Many seasons it seemed necessary to jump prices at Christmas, to make up for the low returns of the overproductive period of the fall, but under present conditions, he feels it will be impossible to raise retail prices any higher, and it will be a mistake for growers and wholesalers to boost them as usual.

The Joseph Heacock Co. offered very well flowered plants of Cyripidium insigne in five and six-inch short pots, bearing four to five flowers each at 50 cents per flower, which price included the plant. They are disposing of the stock in this way, as it is not found profitable. K.

Pittsburgh.

NOTICEABLE SHORTAGE OF STOCK.

Flowers of all kinds are very scarce, especially roses and carnations. American Beauties are arriving in larger amounts and have to be sold at reduced prices. Only specials are to be had in the shorter grades and are selling well, but there are not enough of them. Carnations, which have been scarce for some time have been selling at $12.50 per 100. Lily of the valley is very much in demand and is coming in larger amounts. Violets have been scarce but larger receipts are looked for. The supply of Paper Whites is limited and they continue to move at $6 per 100, which is a good figure. Lilies are in good demand at $25. There does not seem to be the great demand for Christmas flowers that marked the trade of former years, possibly due to the extremely high prices asked. Many stores are featuring artificial flowers and wreaths instead. The supply houses had a very successful year and are cleaned out of all novelties. M.

ADVANCE BUYING NORMAL.

The past week is well described as a week of preparation for the Christmas trade. Wholesalers were on the alert and lookout for possible supplies, and it is no joke to state that, some of the growers have also been on the lookout in order to learn the trend of prices. As for actual business in cut flowers, the demand was for current needs not above the ordinary, though, of course, many retailers had in mind a Christmas supply. The arrivals, particularly of tea roses and violets, were light and prices continued to advance. In roses, the heaviest demand was for the shorter grades and by the middle of the week, it was, so to speak, "the early bird that got the worm." No. 2 roses ranged from $10 to $12 per 100, when 100 could be bought at one store; possibly a few in small lots, went at the rate of $15. The demand for specials was lighter, but in general, specials ranged at from $25 to $30 for such as the Killarneys and Ophelias, to $80 and $75 per 100 for Scott Kays and Hadley, Columbias and Mrs. Charles Russells coming in between at $35 to $50. On December 20, special American Beauties struck the $150 mark, wholesale rates. About the same time, red and Mrs. Ward carnations went to $15 and $20 per 100. Although the violet supply was short, quite a few came in toward the last of the week and sold for $2.50 per 100. One retailer states that on the evening of December 20, he paid $3 for violets, but it was probably an "emergency call." There were plenty of orchids and gardenias, the shorter gardenias and small cattleyas going cheap, about 25 to 35 cents per flower, for small cattleyas and $1.50 per dozen for short gardenias. The best cattleyas did not go above 75 cents each, nor the best gardenias above $5 and $6 per dozen. Up to this writing but few cut poinsettias are on the market, but a larger supply will be on hand by the first of the week and are likely to range from $5 to $9 per dozen, depending on the quality of bloom and length of stem. Long stem sweet peas, which were not plentiful, brought $4 and $5 per 100. Lilies and lily of the valley are not essentially Christmas stock and have had no unusual movement. There are plenty of lilies and they keep around $15 to $20 per 100 flowers; lily of the valley about $6 to $10. There is on the market a sprinkling of minor stock such as bouvardia, marigolds, snandragons and cut nansies, all of which bring high prices. The few chrysanthemums that are about, scarcely count, but anything passably good sells well.

ACTIVITY IN THE RETAIL STORES.

In the retail stores, there has been great activity in getting in and arranging plants. The retailers' customers have been pushing their plants. They have them on hand and must pay for them, and "sell now" is the word. On December 20, several retailers stated that plant orders were coming in fast, which was attested by the groups that had been set aside and marked "sold." In plants, there is a fairly good supply of poinsettias in pans, arranged with asparagus, Christmas heather, cyclamens, begonias, primroses and the berried plants. There is a good supply of Otahete oranges that are particularly fine, being well fruited and the fruit well ripened. The foliage plants, in combinations, are likely to loom larger than ever before. One notes many combinations solely of foliage plants, such as crotons, Dracaena, terminalis and various ferns. They are also extensively used in combination with a pot of heather, poinsettia or cyclamen. In conclusion, we may state that the outlook for Christmas business is good. The high prices on cut flowers will doubtless have a deterring effect on the people of moderate means, but it is "a condition, not a theory" that confronts them, and there is no help for it but a break in prices, which seems unlikely. While plant prices are high, more of "an eyeful" can be had for the money than in cut flowers.

NOTES.

A committee visited the office of Secretary John Young, December 17, his fiftieth birthday, and presented him with a cake—we are at a loss whether to describe it as a monster, a mammoth or a whale of a cake—at any rate it was some cake and was illuminated by 50 wax candles. President Totty of the S. A. F. made the presentation speech and could not have been more eloquent if he had been discussing the celebrated "fourteen points." He hoped that John would live to get another cake illuminated with fifty more candles, and the committee unanimously approved the sentiment. Secretary Young made grateful and eloquent response. As it was a spontaneous affair, we are uncertain about the origin of the committee; like Topsy, it "just grewed," and "grewed" fast, adding to its numbers as it moved joyously toward the secretary's office. The leading spirits were President Totty, Frank H. Traendly, J. K. Allen, and President-elect Kessler of the florists' club. Others in an unofficial capacity who—were it not that modesty forbids—we might say, graced the occasion by their presence, were: Frederick R. Newbold, A. F. Faulkner and John Henry Pepper.

We have read of cruel tyrants who placed an abundance of food near to their starving prisoners, near enough for them to see it and inhale its appetizing odors, but not near enough for them to reach. In a milder form, we have learned of a case somewhat similar. When the people of the United States were told that to win the war it was necessary to economize with food and coal, they cheerfully obeyed. But now, the war is over, or seems to be, as we have a large delegation in France, regardless of expense, preparing to make the world safe for democracy. In the meantime, no wartime order of the fuel administration caused more annoyance than the recent one forbidding men who had domestic anthracite in their cellars, to use it. We have learned that at least one range near this city, an officer has been stationed to prevent any of the employees from using coal that had been bought and paid for.

Anthony Ruzicka, a rose grower of Madison, N. J., who ships his stock to this market, and of whom mention was made in our Madison notes of December 7, has bought the Samuel Lura range, located in Chatham, N. J. He has taken possession, and as it has been closed for some time, he will, during the winter, have it placed in readiness for an early start in the spring, and in the meantime keep the Madison range, which is leased property, in operation until he is ready to devote all his energies to his own range.

The daily papers have men on their staffs that can write intelligently on various lines of trade, but it is a rarity to find one who writes of the florist business without garbling and making a mess of it. Their pet phrase used to be "millionaire florists." Recently, an evening paper of this city published an article on the high price of Christmas trees, intimating that the florists are to blame, when it is, or should be well known that in comparison, only a small number of the Christmas trees are sold by florists.

An excellent stock of Christmas plants, well arranged, was noticed at the store of Malandre Brothers, Broadway and 72d street. In the foreground of their show window there was an arrangement of baskets, each containing a small azalea and a small plant of heather, the filling in being with a variety of small ferns, all being decorated with appropriate ribbons. The stock of Otaheite oranges and other plants, in this store, was exceptionally fine.

Far be it from us to charge any florist with profiteering, but William P. Ford, 107 West 28th street, knowing that we used to live in Missouri, has "shown" us that he is not a profiteer. A week before Christmas he offered to book a large Christmas order for a customer at the then current prices, saying that prices were "high enough."

H. E. Froment should be pleased with the Christmas trade, as in the general shortage of roses, he was receiving not less than 25 or 30 boxes each day from the range of L. B. Codington, Murray Hill, N. J.

The Astoria Florist had a stock of good ardisias, as well as heather, poinsettias and foliage plants. A feature of this store was boxwood wreaths, decorated with spruce cones.

In addition to a good stock of plants, the Pappas Brothers made up a lot of "Victory Balls" of boxwood and red immortelles, and decorated with red, white and blue ribbon.

The largest stock of poinsettias noticed in any wholesale store were at William Kessler's, 113 West 28th street. He had them both cut and in pans.

In addition to many foliage plant combinations and pots of heather and pans of poinsettias, David Clark's Sons had quite a stock of azaleas.

The Broadway Florist had a good stock of poinsettias, Otaheite oranges, cyclamens and other plants.

The Seed Trade

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

GLADIOLUS bulbs are in good demand. Baby gladioli are reported sold out.

ENSIGN CARL CROPP, son of Carl Cropp of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, is home for the holidays.

MONTREAL, QUE.—Harry's Seed Store has been opened at 249 Pailleur street, under the management of H. Pare.

TUBEROSE bulbs will be scarce and caladiums none too plentiful. The standard kinds of canna roots are 20 per cent higher than last year.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover closed 15 cents lower December 21 at $24.75, a drop of $1.10 during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents lower, selling at $5.05; December, $5.05; January, $5.10 and May $5.25.

THE holiday green supply at Chicago was well cleaned up. South Water street stock half packed sold at $7.00 to $8.00, seedsmen's stock $10.00 to $12.00. Bouquet green was scarce at $10.00.

ONION SET warehousemen in the Chicago district welcome the wintry weather which started December 23-24. The prolonged mild weather has not helped the keeping quality of their stocks.

A. T. FERRELL, of A. T. Ferrell & Co., Saginaw, Mich., is making a holiday excursion to Oklahoma. He reports that the great and general increased production of beans for food has evidently stimulated improvements in bean picking and cleaning machinery.

THE restrictions on the importation of bulbs have been relaxed. Applications for licenses should be made in the usual way through the bureau of imports of the war trade board, and inquiries for further details from those interested should be similarly addressed.

FROM last reports, First Lieutenant Jack Earl is doing captain's duty and is with the American forces in Germany, while Second Lieutenant Douglas Earl is in Bar-le-Duc, according to a cable received by their father, H. M. Earl, of F. W. Bolgiano & Co., Washington, D. C.

AXEL KNUDSEN, 2207 Portland avenue, Minneapolis, Minn., American representative of L. Daehnfeldt, Ltd., Odense, Denmark, has the sympathy of the trade in the death of his wife, a victim of influenza. Mr. Knudsen and his children are both recovering from the same disease.

A REPORT from the Netherlands states that the Holland-America line has fixed its plant rate for the coming spring at 60 shillings per 40 cubic feet. Exporters are trying for a 40 shilling rate. The former charge was only 25 shillings for the same space. The insurance rate is declining, sea mines being fished out daily, and it is thought the war risks will be down to the minimum by the spring shipping dates.

Timothy of New Strains.

In the work of timothy breeding conducted by the bureau of plant industry of the United States department of agriculture, in co-operation with the Ohio agricultural experiment station, Elyria, pure strains, which give promise of being more valuable than ordinary timothy, have been developed, and of some of these sufficient seed has been obtained for distribution.

Free Seeds National Nuisance.

In an article in which the annual free seed distribution is referred to as "a reproach to democratic government," the Country Gentleman recently said in part:

"Time was when these seeds represented promising varieties gathered from the ends of the earth in the hope of leaving no good crop undiscovered, and when they were sent to farmers in the various sections of the country, it was for actual testing—an honorable beginning. Now, however, the stuff sent out is commercial stock, supplied on contract, sometimes good, often bad, but never rare; indeed, the less said about the pedigree the better. The farmers do not want the seeds. They cost Uncle Sam a lot of money; and almost everybody is disgusted with what is nothing but a petty graft. If free seed distribution answers no purpose except to save a few constituents the expense of buying garden seeds, then why not stop the service?"

"Is it not possible, now that we are at war for our existence, to declare the practise of free seed distribution a national nuisance and stop it as a war measure? The food that is to win the war will not come from 'new, rare and valuable' varieties, but from standard strains such as the farmers have in abundance, or are willing to get from reliable seedsmen directly responsible for their results. If as a people we have the power to take men away from their homes, alter entirely the channels of trade, to revise the processes of business, and even to revolutionize the everyday life and eating habits of our people, we certainly have the power to stop this evil practise, if only we will address ourselves to the undertaking."

"The war will help us to slough off a lot of moldy excrescences. Let us clean up at this point. Let us have a bill abolishing the free seed distribution as a national nuisance."

Cabbage Seed Selection.

Trials conducted by the Pennsylvania State College agricultural experiment station, have shown that it is possible and frequently desirable for the commercial grower to raise his own cabbage seed as he can use greater care in the selection of his plants than is possible when seed is grown commercially. Bulletin No. 147, issued by the station under the title "Miscellaneous Experiments" states that last year 54 seedsmen listed 243 different names. Of these, only 35 were listed by more than 10 seedsmen and 174 names were not listed by more than two firms. During the past eight years practically all of the varieties listed have been tested at the station but thus far, only a very few of recent introduction have been found superior to the well established varieties. One of the exceptions which has proved valuable is Copenhagen Market, first disseminated in 1911, but now sold under several different names.

Celery Leaf Spot Carried on Seed.

Some experiments made in Ireland show that celery seed often carries spores of the leaf spot disease. Ninety-two percent of 109 samples purchased from dealers and representing all common varieties showed the presence of the fungus. In some tests for the disinfection of the seeds, it was found that infected seeds are rendered safe without serious injury to germinability by an immersion for three hours in hydrogen peroxide or formalin, with or without one hour's previous soaking in water.

The standard barrel of the United States should contain 7,056 cubic inches, with 28½-inch staves and 17½-inch heads, head material not thicker than 2/5 of an inch.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, December 23.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $3.50 to $5.00; celery, crate, $1.15 to $1.50; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.00 to $3.00; radishes, per dozen bunches, 40 to 45 cents; tomatoes, 6 baskets, $6.00 to $6.50.

New York, December 23.—Celery (state) per bunch, 40 to 85 cents; cucumbers, $1.00 to $2.75 per dozen; mushrooms, 75 cents to $2.00 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 12 to 30 cents; lettuce, per package, 75 cents to $5.00; radishes, per 100 bunches, $2.00 to $4.00.

Tomato Disease Control.

The control of the fusarium wilt of tomatoes through breeding for disease resistance now seems assured, according to the United States department of agriculture. The occurrence of this disease is one of the principal limiting factors in the cultivation of tomatoes, as the fungus which causes it lives for an indefinite time in the soil and the larger part of the tomato-growing area east of the Mississippi is already infected. We now have an excellent commercial variety, a selection from the Stone, which appears to possess a high degree of resistance to fusarium wilt in tests in a large number of states. It has been distributed this season to a limited extent in all the states where the greatest losses occur and is being increased for larger distribution next year. Other varieties which are even more promising in disease resistance and which have been bred to full special market requirements are being tested and propagated this year.

Previous efforts to control the septoria leaf-spot of tomatoes, which causes losses amounting to several millions of dollars annually, by the use of standard Bordeaux mixture and ordinary spraying methods, have not only given irregular results, but in the majority of cases unprofitable returns. A new resin-fish-oil soap Bordeaux mixture applied by improved methods has given excellent results in the control of this disease and is being used by growers in a number of localities this year. In preliminary experiments in Florida, alternaria leaf-spot of tomatoes was successfully controlled by spraying with standard Bordeaux mixture. Investigations of the diseases attacking Florida winter-grown tomatoes, with particular reference to their development in transit to market, have shown clearly which of these diseases develop and spread in transit and thus where remedial measures must be applied for their control.

Sweet Potato Diseases and Storage.

In calling attention to the report of the United States department of agriculture that 10 per cent of the 1917 sweet potato crop was destroyed by field diseases while 50 per cent were lost in storage, the extension service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, offers the following suggestions for saving this crop:

Select seed potatoes from the best yielding hills.

Split the stems down to the roots and examine for stem-rot. If the stem is blackened inside, stem-rot is present and no potatoes should be taken for seed from such hills.

Examine each potato carefully and discard any with nearly round, sunken, black spots on the surface. These potatoes have black-rot.

Sweet potatoes with other types of wounds on the surface and with rotted ends should not be taken for seed. Other diseases may be harbored in such spots and may transmit the disease to the crop next year.

Handle your sweet potatoes with care. A barrel of sweet potatoes is often worth as much as a barrel of apples. Do you handle them in the same way?

Keep your storage house dry.

Keep seed potatoes and, better, all sweet potatoes at a temperature of 85° F. during the sweating period, giving free ventilation to the storage room, then lower the temperature gradually to 50° and keep them at this temperature in a well-ventilated room.

Farmers' Bulletins No. 714 and 970 contains much valuable information on this subject and may be had upon application to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The Nursery Trade

American Association of Nurserymen.

J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., President; J. Edward M. on, Morrisville, Pa., Vice-President; Curtis Nye Smith, 19 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Secretary and Counsel. Forty-four annual convention will be held at Chicago in 1919.

The California walnut growers are said to have harvested walnuts to the value of $9,500,000 from 65,000 acres.

HOLLAND advices are to the effect that the cost of freight and packing for a case of nursery stock of 40 cubic feet has been reduced from $50 to $22.

A REPORT from the Netherlands states that the Holland-America line has fixed its plant rate for the coming spring at 60 shillings per 40 cubic feet. Exporters are trying for a 40 shilling rate. The former charge was only 25 shillings for the same space. The insurance rate is declining, sea mines being fished out daily, and it is thought the war risks will be down to the minimum by the spring shipping dates.

Fruit Needed for Soldiers in France.

E. L. Goodsell, of the Fruit Auction Company of New York, who recently returned from the other side, brought interesting information about oranges and apples. He says, "There are no oranges to be bought in either France or England as a direct proposition." He says that there is much illness among American soldiers and Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. workers in France and England, and that American doctors in both countries are urging shipments of oranges from the United States so that the juice may be used in the medical treatment of fever patients. He has undertaken to supply the demand, and urges contributions for that purpose. The Cunard and White Star lines will carry the fruit free of all expenses. A box of 200 oranges, he says, can be bought in New York, for about $4. Apples, he says, retail over there at from 10 to 40 cents each, and that the 10 cent ones are of the size that farmers usually feed to stock.

Fir Seed for Trees in France.

Santa Claus' pack was never more fraught with possibilities than a gray canvas bag which started December 17 in the keeping of Percival S. Ridsdale, secretary of the American Forestry Association, to the French department of Agriculture and forestry in Paris.

Out of that bag, which weighs 15 pounds, tall fir trees are to come, trees to the number of 50,000, which will grow in the places of vast French forests shaved away by German vandalism and cover the scars of a million and a half shell-torn acres of soil in northern France.

It is going to take 40 years to cover up what the Germans defaced in four, according to Mr. Ridsdale, and the first 15 pounds of seed must be doubled over and over again until thousands have been furnished to France. This task the American Forestry Association will undertake to perform, and Mr. Ridsdale will offer to officials of the French forestry department all the seeds it needs free of charge.

"France asked for 250 pounds of fir seed," Mr. Ridsdale said. "In this country there were only 15 pounds available. As there was no demand for seed while the war was going on, the northern firs were not stripped of seed this fall. They are now snow-bound, and it will be another year before any can be gathered. But this 15 pounds will raise trees worth a million dollars."

It will take two years to gather the seeds needed for reconstruction of French forests. If the French government accepts the offer of the American association. The amount needed cannot be gauged accurately, for the soil there

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedman should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

is so impregnated with chemicals that no one can tell how well trees will grow.

Mr. Ridsdale pointed out that the reforestation of France is an important part of the reconstruction programme. Of the 900,000 population in the devastated area about one-half were dependent on forests during six months of the year. Some were woodcutters, some wood carvers, some worked in the forests and thousands depended on wood for fuel. Until forests assume a fair size again the people must exist without one of their important economic resources.—New York Tribune.

Plant Quarantine Modification Sought.

Following the approval by the department of agriculture of the drastic regulations of the federal horticultural board, announcement of which was made in these columns, issue of December 14, page 978, which will mean a total exclusion of many important plant importations, effective on and after June 1, 1919, horticultural interests in the United States have taken up the matter with the Belgian consulate for transmission to that country's legation at Washington, and are assured that all possible assistance will be forthcoming from that source as far as Belgian products are concerned, according to Winfred Rolker of August Rolker & Sons, New York.

As regards imports from Holland, in a bill recently offered by the Netherlands government to the United States authorities in charge of plant importations, attention is called to the fact that being fully aware of the necessity of giving the highest possible warrants as to the absence of insects and plant diseases, the phytopathological service of that country has, since official inspection of nurseries was first established in 1899, improved the work of inspection, and since 1910, certificates have been issued not on the mere results of inspection of grounds, but also from such time until all plants intended for export are being packed and shipped. Continual inspection is made, as far as possible, on all nurseries in that country, and the application of controlling measures is encouraged with force. Attention is also called to the fact that the reports of American inspection authorities relating to importations of Holland nursery stock during 1913-1914 were most favorable, and in the few instances where suggestions were made, these did not apply to insects and plant diseases which might especially have been imported in balled plants.

Nassau County Horticultural Society.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held in Pembroke hall, Glen Cove, N. Y., December 11. President Robert Jones in the chair, and a large attendance despite inclement weather. Samuel J. Trepess was called upon to conduct the election of officers, which resulted as follows: Joseph Adler, president; Frank Watson, vice-president; Ernest J. Brown, treasurer; Ernest Westlake, secretary, and Harry Goodband, corresponding secretary. The three last named being re-elected. Robert Jones was elected trustee for three years. The executive committee is comprised of William Noonan, Thomas Henderson, Benjamin Sutherland, William Milstead, William Churchill, W. G. Carter and Thomas Meech. The treasurer presented his report showing the affairs of the society to be in excellent condition both as to membership and finances. President-elect Adler thanked the members for the honor conferred upon him, and asked their co-operation in making his administration a profitable and successful one for the organization. There was a short discussion on "How to Grow Amyrillus and When to Rest Them."

The judges for the monthly exhibits were Thomas Twigg, William Noonan and George Platt, the awards being as follows: President's special prize for best table decoration, open to gardeners' assistants only, to Henning Michaelson assistant to George Ferguson; John Gailens, assistant to William Churchill, second. Exhibits for the next meeting, January 8, will be three cut poinsettias, 25 spikes of freesia and six ears of corn.

A letter of condolence was ordered sent to the family of the late A. Hans, a member, recently passed away.

After the business meeting a social session was indulged in at which John W. Everitt presided as toastmaster in his usual good style. Quite a lot of good talent was unearched among the members, not forgetting Andy Wilson's clog dance.

HARRY GOODBAND, Cor. Sec'y.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Next Annual Convention, Detroit, Mich., August 19-21, 1919.

The President's Message.

As president of the Society of American Florists, I extend hearty greetings to all members of our beloved society, and to all members of the craft everywhere.

First, let us give thanks to the Almighty God, who has seen fit in his infinite wisdom to end the cruel conflict that has been raging in bleeding Europe for over four years, and for the part our glorious nation has been privileged to have in bringing it to a speedy end.

I am sure that florists all over the world can point with pride to the part we, as a profession, have had in helping to win the war. Our money has been cheerfully lent to the government, and given to other war activities, while our gallant young men have marched out at the country's call, cheerfully sacrificing their all for the great cause of humanity and world democracy. Fellow members, our work is not finished. We must now prepare ourselves for the great reconstruction period. We have come out of the struggle far better equipped for this great coming period than many of us expected, so it behooves us now to concentrate our forces, and just how can we best do this?

First of all, I want to address myself to the young men of our society. Be sure and co-operate. Strive to continue the wise policies so well established by the old leaders. Increase the standard of culture and quality. And let us add to that the commercial progress in keeping with the present day and age.

Just now publicity is the watchword. The corner stone for this wonderful addition was laid just 16 short months ago in the city of New York. Soon after, our great nation entered into the war, but in spite of the trying commercial situation over all our land, the success was most marvellous. Too much credit cannot be given to the men who launched this great movement, and to the committees who so nobly carried on the work. Everybody should get behind this great work and assist the leaders now more than ever.

Our business must be adjusted to meet the demands which will be made upon us. Millions of dollars will be diverted from other channels. It behooves us to prepare ourselves to get a large part of this business. Our product is bound to be in greater demand than ever before. We must strive to furnish better quality and render more efficient service. This can best be accomplished by more thoroughly organizing our forces.

To the officers and members of the affiliating organizations, I extend the most cordial invitation for a hearty co-operation the coming year. Several have already acquired representatives on the parent society's board of directors, which is very cheering. Let us hope that many more will soon increase their membership so that they too may avail themselves of the opportunity of having their president a member of the board. The old S. A. F. is truly proud of all its offspring, and we bid you speed on in your special lines. It not only means progress for you but it also helps the parent society, and every good parent is anxious to see its children succeed.

To the members of state associations and local florist clubs, I also extend an invitation for hearty co-operation. Every state in the Union should have either a state association or a local club in one of its principal cities. The members of such organization should strive to secure enough members so they too may be represented on the national board of directors. This can be done and we cannot be too thoroughly organized. Let us make this a part of our 1919 platform, ever remembering that we need you and you need us.

The three representative branches of our trade, namely, the grower, wholesaler and retailer, I too want to invite to council with us for promoting the interests of the trade at large. Mr. Grower, it is up to you to get better organized. Growers should have branch organizations, to confer often in reference to combating insects and diseases, the use of fertilizers, etc.; also the kind of stock to grow. In fact, we need more strictly growers' associations.

The wholesaler, too, needs to be more thoroughly organized locally to carry on his interests successfully, and to get into conference with the growers as to the varieties of stock to be grown. In a few cities co-operation of the wholesalers has shown excellent results already.

The retailer is no doubt the best organized of the three branches since the splendid work of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association has so nobly helped to bind the retailers together for our common good. May they continue to prosper, and the retailers locally take more advantage still by becoming even more strongly organized.

The S. A. F. stands ready to help any branch of the trade to become more efficient. We have the means and the ability to assist you. Let us help solve your problems and put floriculture on the high plane where it belongs.

We are now entering an era of brotherly love as never before shown in the history of the world. Never did men's hearts go out to one another as much as now. The spirit of America for humanity and world democracy prevails everywhere, and as men's hearts grow larger, the world seems smaller. The light held aloft by the Statue of Liberty shines the world over. Let us have for our reconstruction programme the slogan, "Competitive Co-operation for the Best Interests of All."

The annual meeting of the American Carnation Society takes place in Cleveland, Ohio, January 29-30, 1919. This is one of the live-wire affiliated organizations of the S. A. F. I understand that all members of our society are invited to join them in a victory love feast. So, as many as possibly can should plan to be present. These get-together meetings mean so much for our future progress.

To the dear ladies of our sister society we too extend hearty greetings. May they continue in the good work of making our annual meetings more sociable, pleasant and inspiring by their presence. May God bless the ladies for their service in the great struggle for humanity through their noble work in the Red Cross and other humanitarian activities.

HOLIDAY TRADE.

Stock in Limited Supply.

There were two predominant features of the 1918 Christmas demand—a limited supply and prices much higher than in previous years. Of course, both of these conditions were in no wise a surprise. They had been a matter of prophecy for some weeks previous, and there was considerable speculation as to what extremes would be recorded and incidentally how the flower buying public would accept the situation. From general indications, there was no serious complaint. There were, of course, instances where prices were so much in excess of last year, in some places 75 to 100 per cent, that protests were emphatic, and in most of these cases, plants were readily substituted. In many cases, however, there seemed to be a realization that flowers should of necessity suffer an advance as well as other items in many lines, and the money was uncomplainingly forthcoming provided quality was given in return. Unfortunately there were numerous complaints regarding "pickled" stock. With practically a general cleanup in all offerings, with the possible exception of violets, it would be hard to determine what varieties might be said to be leaders in popularity. The following reports indicate that the volume of business was about one-third greater than in 1917, the price advance varying from 10 to 100 per cent.

Christmas in the New York Shops.

The high prices on cut flowers created a disquieting situation among the retailers. They or the greater part of them, felt that through the falling off in business in war times, paying higher taxes and higher wages, buying Liberty Bonds and contributing to the numerous humanitarian projects made necessary through the war, that if flowers were to bring high prices, they were entitled to their share of the profits. The larger stores have many customers that can afford to pay high prices, but who are not in the habit of scattering money; they would not have it if they were. No tradesman in any line of business wants to lose a good customer, consequently there was a general feeling among retailers that excessively high prices would have an injurious effect on future business. They were all quite well stocked with plants and plant combinations, and those were pushed whenever possible. Relating to cut flower prices, several prominent retailers have stated what appears to have been the general sentiment among their monied customers, which was, that they paid the prices, but paid them under protest. What effect this may have on the future of the business has yet to be learned. With many of the smaller retail stores, cut flower prices were practically prohibitive to their customers. So far as we can learn, they pushed plants; bought cut flowers only when they felt sure of selling, and a number of them laid in a large amount of artificial stock. To sum up, the writer believes that at such a time as this, cut flowers, if they are good, should bring high prices, which is widely different from unloading worthless stock at high prices. Imagine, for instance, how a retailer might feel who had sold carnations for $5 or $8 per dozen, to have an angry customer come in next day to say that they had all gone to sleep overnight.

EXCELLENT SHOWING OF PLANTS.

Considering the fact that the plant growers have suffered common hardships with the cut flower growers, they sent in fine shipments of stock. Regardless of what the attitude of wholesalers and retailers may be, they are left helpless if the growers fall down. An admirer of good plant stock, knowing the conditions that have prevailed, could not feel anything but pleasure on seeing the fine displays of the retail stores. It has come to be the fashion with leading retailers, while carrying a variety of plant stock, to feature one particular kind. Thus, Thorley, Fifth avenue and 46th street, featured ardisias. At the beginning of the Christmas business, both of his large show windows were filled with them, with more in reserve, all handsomely decorated with red ribbon. Orchid plants in fine combinations were also noticed in his store.

J. H. Small & Sons, Madison avenue and 52nd street, have a large store with ample space for display and they made it very attractive. In one window, particularly noteworthy, a large group of Otaheite orange plants were arranged under a large and spreading cibotium fern, the wings being filled in with large plants of Christmas heather. A leading feature of this store was the large stock of cattleya and oncidium plants, some being used in combinations in large handle baskets with foliage plants, the baskets decorated with "orchid" ribbon.

Relating to the best selling plant stock, it is hard to state what sold best for most of it was cleaned up. It depended upon the fancy of the individual buyers. Heather, poinsettias, oranges, ardisias, and other berried plants, and combinations of crotons and the red dracaenas with ferns, small palms or berried plants, all sold well and there was a good trade in cyclamens. Prices on combination baskets had a wide range, according to size and quality of stock.

Reports from retailers of all of the five boroughs of this city practically agree that they had excellent trade in plants. All stores that draw their custom from salaried people, shopkeepers and other business men of moderate means, report that there was a heavy falling off in cut flower orders, which they attribute altogether to the high prices, the greatest slump being on violets. Prices on orchids were moderate, for a holiday season, and they sold well in all the leading stores.

The store of Charles A. Dards, Madison avenue and 44th street, has always been noted for a variety of fine stock, and this year its reputation was well sustained with large plants of heather, Otaheite oranges, poinsettias, in fact, the best of all that could be found in the greenhouses. One noteworthy feature was a stock of exceptionally fine crotons, many being used in combinations.

Myer, Madison avenue and 58th street, thinks that it was one of the greatest mistakes that the wholesalers ever made; that is, if the growers fixed the prices, to suppose that the public would stand for them. He particularized on violets, saying that when retailers could sell at $5 per 100 for Christmas they would buy 8,000 to 10,000, while last week orders were cut to 1,500 or 2,000.

N. Christatos, who has a good retail store at Sixth avenue and 58th street, informs us that in previous years he has bought for the Christmas trade 10,000 or 12,000 violets. This Christmas, all that he carried was a few bunches. He states that he was asked $3.50 and $4 per 100 and knew that his customers would not stand for such prices.

An attractive feature at the store of Craig Muir, 62 West 40th street, was a collection of small Christmas trees, handsomely decorated, through the taste and industry of Mrs. Muir, with garlands of the red winter berries and small bows of red ribbons. They were of a size suitable for the table and were a real attraction.

The Orchid Florists, Inc., who have recently removed to a new store at the corner of Sixth avenue and 57th street, had a good stock of Otaheite oranges, begonias, poinsettias and other plants and many basket combinations of moderate size, all of which sold well.

There were not enough azaleas in any one store to entitle them to be called leading features, but G. E. M. Stumpp, 761 Fifth avenue, had a good number of well flowered plants. Good combinations were also noticed. He sold out well.

Marshall Clarke, of David Clarke's Sons, stated that plant stock went well. They had over 200 azaleas and sold all but about a dozen. Their trade in cut roses and orchids was good. They did not handle violets, except on the order of a customer.

Henry Hart, 1000 Madison avenue, had a large stock of exceptionally fine plants and sold out. He believes that prices were excessively high, particularly on violets, and says it was not good for the future of the business.

George D. Nicholas, Seventh avenue and 123rd street, stated that his customers bought cut flowers, but somewhat curtailed their orders on account of high prices. His plant trade was good.

Max Schling, 785 Fifth avenue, had a number of excellent features, noteworthy being large camellia plants, and euphorbias, and oncidium orchids in combinations with foliage plants.

The Astoria Florist, 2188 Broadway, who has been there a number of years, stated that it was the best Christmas trade he ever had and that he did not suffer because of high prices.

C. A. Ladiges, Amsterdam avenue and 149th street, said that he had good business in plants, cut roses and orchids, but that his customers would not buy carnations and violets.

J. G. Leikens, Madison avenue and 55th street, said that he had excellent business in plants, but that high prices were bad for his cut flower trade.

Ralph Armstrong, 400 Madison avenue, stated that his plant trade was never better, but cut flower orders were less, excepting on orchids.

Leikens, Madison avenue and 55th street, featured the oranges in his show windows and had besides, many fine plant combinations.

The Cathedral Florists, Broadway and 110th street, stated that they could not do business in cut flowers at the Christmas prices.

The Otaheite oranges were never finer, and they were attractions in all the leading retail stores.

At the Dards store, it was stated that they had a fine plant trade.

Christmas in Philadelphia Shops.

There had been more or less question in nearly all branches of the trade as to the prospects for the holiday business, but the retail stores took the bull by the horns, and in nearly all establishments, went the limit in their preparations for a busy time. J. J. Habermehl's Sons have, with their store and greenhouses at 22nd and Diamond streets and their stores in the Bellevue-Stratford and Ritz-Carlton hotels, an organization and conveniences for handling the business that is well nigh perfect. Plant baskets were one of the specialties, and we question if anything more artistic was seen anywhere. They were all fairly large and filled with an assortment of high grade stock. Highly colored crotons, Maranta rubra striata, Dracæna massangeana, Kelleriana, and Sanderli, Pandanus Veitchii, Cocos Weddelliana, and the Glory fern from 4-inch pots were largely used. The flowering stock included heathers, poinsettias, azaleas, cyclamens, and Otaheite oranges. There were many beautiful combinations, which when planted, and after a few days in the greenhouses, straightened out and were at their best. They were arranged by Harry Jones and C. E. Vanden Hengle of the Bellevue store force, two of the best artists in the business, and who take a delight and pride in their work. Some very classy wreaths were seen in the Bellevue shop made of nursery evergreens decorated with variegated Oregon holly and California holly berries. In their 22nd street store, there was a demand for cemetery work. A large stock of bronze magnolia wreaths, decorated with colored adiantum, cones, thistles, colored grasses, palm leaves and artificial poinsettias, were very showy. A house of large azaleas and poinsettias for cutting was in splendid condition.

There is always an elegant assortment of plant baskets and foliage and flowering plants to be seen at the H. H. Battles store at holiday seasons. The Christmas stock this year was fully up to the high standard maintained here. The American bamboo or corn-stalk basket was a unique conception, equal in effect to the best imported material. Window and shelf boxes or jardinières of this material, with a trellis at the back, as well as baskets of various shapes, mostly in the natural color, were beautifully filled, and with their ribbon decoration, looked very salable. Single specimen foliage and flowering plants were featured in fancy pottery, as were Otaheite oranges. Mrs. Peterson begonias in birch bark covers with appropriate ribbons, were inviting. Baskets filled entirely with poinsettias and ferns with slashing red bows were very Christmasy. The ribbon used is all wired so as to retain its shape under all conditions. Wreaths, both for cemetery and house decoration, were a feature. A dodo of these, high on the wall, each standing in silhouette against a white card background, made them very noticeable.

Pennock Bros., where one can always find the last word in plant basket combinations, had their store and conservatory in the rear stocked with an elegant assortment. Many specimens of foliage and flowering plants were featured in fancy pottery and hand-painted pot covers and tubs. A Jap. basket filled with poinsettias and ferns was a good seller. Large plant baskets had their handles trimmed with spruce and cones, to which the red ribbon decoration gave a seasonable finish. Very choice looking baskets contained miniature oranges and cyripediums, while others with growing cattleys and Glory ferns, were rich indeed. Some baskets also contained ardisias, a scarce plant this year. Baskets of choice cut evergreens and dried grasses and other colored material were exceptionally well arranged. Fancy wreaths of boxwood, nursery evergreens with cones and holly decorations were a quantity product here, most of which were quite elaborate.

Six-inch hemlock covered wooden tubs, filled with cyclamens, were a feature with Charles Henry Fox. His beautiful store contained a fine array of plant baskets and individual specimen plants. The latter were in elegant pot covers, vases and vase baskets, into which the pot fitted snugly, the tall handles being well decorated with ribbons. Red chenille wreaths with bay berry clusters and handsomely decorated bronze magnolia wreaths were features. A price tag, perforated across the center with duplicate numbers printed on the back, is a time saver. When the article is sold, the lower half of the tag is pinned to the sales slip. The remaining half automatically marks the object sold.

Elmer W. Gaehring, who makes a specialty of fancy cemetery wreaths, had a splendidly arranged assortment. A feature was a full wrapped wreath covered two-thirds with red chenille, the balance backed with magnolia leaves and decorated with ruscus, statice, dyed lycopodium, thistles, cones, artificial poinsettias and short palm leaves. This had a large sale. There were a number of large pieces on the same principle with magnolia leaves, instead of chenille. Purple and white chenille were also used to good advantage. The window was well set with show pieces.

G. A. Leins, in his beautiful new store, 28th and Girard avenue, was all ready with a good stock of wreaths in variety and flowering plants. Four-inch poinsettias were decorated with small mats around the pot and two looped and twisted pussy willow sprays stuck in for a handle. A small chiffon bow added a finish. A feature was a couple of large cones decorated with light Christmas material and narrow fibre ribbon. These suspended by a narrow red ribbon, made a very pretty parlor or window ornament.

T. Nelson Geiger displayed a quantity of partridge berry globes, which sold well. Miniature pyramids, made of cut boxwood set in fancy jars or pots, the stems of such lengths as to reach the water were, with their red ribbon bows, very attractive. Very good looking wreaths were a feature. Dried double gypsophila was used to advantage in their decoration.

John C. Gracey, in his Columbia avenue and 26th street store, had a large assortment of wreaths and baskets of green and dried Christmas material, all very well arranged. A slender red chenille wreath or hoop, 12 inches in diameter, with a decoration on either side, connected with a fibre ribbon, looked salable.

At George Craig's, there was a good collection of magnolia and chenille wreaths, decorated with the usual Christmas material. The greenhouse contained a choice assortment of foliage and flowering plants. Trellis boxes, decorated with miniature red chenille wreaths, were attractive.

Wm. Wyatt's cozy store was stocked with Christmas wreaths and flowering and foliage plants. Well filled, medium-priced birch bark covered boxes were conspicuous.

Joseph Josephs, 1714 Columbia avenue, displayed a large assortment of Christmas wreaths and small baskets of holiday materials. A good business was reported.

Charles G. Brunner, Frankford avenue, was strong on magnolia wreaths, stock made up in summer and recently decorated. Business was very good.

K.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Gude Bros Co. reports a much greater volume of Christmas business, compared with that of 1917, with prices in most cases doubled. There was an ample supply of cut stock here and orchids were the only flowers that did not move readily. The quality was equally as good, if not better, than last year. Anything in the plant line that showed a flower went without question. The demand was greater than could be judiciously handled, and it was necessary to close the doors at 6 p. m. December 24 and they were not unlocked Christmas morning.

OMAHA, NEB.—With prices for Christmas flowers 30 to 40 per cent higher than a year ago, and a shortage of cut stock, which was of normal quality, trade showed a corresponding gain in volume of sales, is the situation in this city reported by Hess & Swoboda. There was a noticeable increase in the demand for plants of all kinds. The general opinion prevails that, quality considered, the prices were too high and will hurt the business where the public wants to "Say it with flowers."

RICHMOND, VA.—As compared with last year, prices jumped from 50 to 75 per cent, although the demand was good considering an insufficient supply of cut flowers, according to Ratcliffe & Tanner. The public seemed willing to pay the price, and as a result the volume of sales showed an increase of about one-third over last year. In plants, the demand was greater than the supply. Roses, carnations and violets were also short items.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—In summing up the 1918 Christmas trade, A. J. McNeill estimates an increased volume of sales as compared with a year ago of about 30 per cent. Prices showed an advance of 20 per cent and there was a good supply of cut stock of excellent quality. There was a generous supply of bulbous flowers which met with a good call and flowering plants moved unusually well.

OBITUARY.

E. Y. Teas.

E. Y. Teas, that intrepid pioneer who probed ahead into the uncharted and unknown, blazing the way for others to follow, and hardly ever accorded the fame due him, being so busily engaged in his pursuit that he made but little record of his achievements, died at his home in Eaton, O., December 15, age 88 years. He had been failing rapidly since Thanksgiving but was only confined to his room one day, maintaining a keen interest in everything pertaining to horticulture until the end.

The deceased, during his active business life, was associated with and numbered among his personal friends such leaders in the craft as John J. Thomas, Patrick Barry, Charles Downing, James Vick, Peter Henderson and others, of New York; F. R. Elliott, Dr. John A. Warner, Nicholas Longworth and G. W. Campbell, of Ohio; Thomas Meehan, Robert Buist and John Dick, of Pennsylvania; Marshall P. Wilder and others of the old school, with all of whom he had most pleasant social and business relations.

Mr. Teas started in the nursery business at Raysville, Henry county, Indiana, in 1847, in partnership with his elder brother, John C. Teas, their first stock being apple trees. In the spring of 1859, he drove a wagonload of these to Michigan City, Ind., a distance of 240 miles, disposing of them to farmers along the way at 10 cents each. He then filled his wagon with white pine gathered from near Lake Michigan, which were added to the stock in the nursery. About this time he discovered a superior kind of catalpa growing in Dayton, O. Seed from this developed a variety, which when grown on its own roots, formed a dwarf tree or shrub which was highly ornamental. When trained as a standard it is very distinct and useful where space is limited. In his pioneer work, Mr. Teas collected and tested many new varieties of fruit and ornamental trees. He made several trips to Europe and was constantly in touch with the best nurseries of the continent. A currant seedling, raised about 1880 from the variety La Versailles, was named for President Wilder. This proved to be a great acquisition and is still classed by the trade as one of the best.

Mr. Teas also became very much interested in roses, and in the late sixties, with E. G. Hill as foreman, gradually worked up one of the largest stocks in the United States. All of the newer European varieties were imported each season. A beautiful crimson, raised in France, was named Monsieur E. Y. Teas in his honor. While still grown abroad, it never succeeded well in this country.

One of Mr. Teas' most valuable introductions is the native Hydrangea arborescens sterilis or grandiflora, a sterile form with double flowers of purest white. It was discovered by James Semple, growing in the woods near Allegheny, Pa., from whom Mr. Teas purchased plants and soon worked up a stock which he distributed throughout this country and Europe, where it has proved a splendid flowering shrub for the lawn, quite the equal of the Japanese H. paniculata, but being at its best in June and early July. He always took an interest in all matters pertaining to the development of horticulture. In October, 1860, he assisted in organizing the Indiana Horticultural Society and was the last of the 27 charter members.

Mr. Teas retired from business in 1915 and was succeeded in his nursery at Centerville, Ind., by his son, Fred E. Teas, who had been his valuable assistant and manager for a number of years. His floral department, including real estate, was purchased by Fred S. Davis, who continued this branch of the business. Mrs. Teas and a daughter, Mrs. J. E. Parker, of Eaton, O., and a son, Fred E. Teas, of Centerville, Ind., survive.

Edward Eccles.

Edward Eccles, a florist of Short Hills, N. J., died very suddenly on Christmas day while delivering flowers for the greenhouses of Thomas Jones, with whom he had been associated for 36 years. He was born in Farmby, England, 58 years ago. Before coming to this country, in 1882, he was assistant gardener to Mr. Ashton, of Farmby, a private estate. After arriving in this country, he secured employment with Mr. Jones and later married his daughter, Elizabeth. As stated above, he had continued the association till his death. He is survived by his widow, three daughters, Margaret Winifred, Marie Ellen, and Beatrice Elizabeth, one son, Thomas Hallock, and one granddaughter. He is also survived by his mother, three brothers and one sister, all residing in England. Mr. Eccles had a kind and genial personality and his sudden death was a great shock to his family and many friends.

George Allen.

George Allen, who conducted a flower store at Broadway and 168th street, New York, died December 30, after an illness of but one hour, age 36 years. He was a son of the well-known wholesaler, James K. Allen, of 28th street, that city, and had worked with his father until embarking in business for himself 10 years ago. He is survived by his widow and one daughter, his father, mother, one brother and one sister.

MERCHANTVILLE, N. J.—The business of the late Benjamin Connell will be closed out, it is announced.

PEORIA, ILL.—Henry Baer, well-known carnation specialist of this city, is recovering from an operation performed as the result of having his right hand badly crippled by coming in contact with a live electric wire.

I have finished another year, said God,
In gray, green, white and brown.
I've sown the seed upon the sod,
Scattered up the word I wrote the clod,
And let the last sun down.

HAPPINESS and prosperity to all in 1919.

POINSETTIAS were used at the dinner given to President Wilson at Buckingham palace.

LEAD has been reduced to six cents per pound. The continued lowering of the price should soon affect the high cost of florists' tinfoil.

A. LANGE, Chicago retail florist, calls attention to a Christmas telegraph order sent to an Iowa florist who had no stock good enough to fill the order and transferred it to a brother florist in a nearby city. That's the right spirit for 1919 and all succeeding years. Too many neglect such orders or execute them without regard to the requirements.

Personal.

Prof. Nehrling, engaged on government work in vegetable pathology at Pullman, Wash., passed through Chicago, December 30, enroute to Washington, D. C.

Harry A. Bunyard, now with the Red Cross in France, sends Christmas greetings from Bordeaux.

National Publicity for Flowers.

The second year of our national publicity campaign has commenced under favorable conditions. The great war is ended, and with it the necessity, which many people have believed to exist, for economies, which included the use of flowers in the home. Industrial conditions in 1919 are expected to be such as to insure prosperity, and everything augurs well for the florist trade.

It was demonstrated through our work in the year just closed that the public is influenced by publicity of the kind which is suggestive, therefore, our committees believe that it is advisable to confine their efforts along the lines already exploited. As already announced, contracts have been placed for a series of advertisements to appear repeatedly during January and February in 28 national magazines. Electrotypes of these advertisements for the use of florists in their local newspapers are now ready, and the set of six will be mailed promptly on the receipt of the price, $3 per set. All the magazines circulate in the neighborhood of every florist in the country, so a liberal use of these advertisements during the two months is strongly recommended to those who want to draw individual benefit from the magazine publicity.

Our committees are earnestly hoping that all florists who have not already notified the secretary of their willingness to make an annual subscription to the fund for the remaining three years of the campaign will do so at once. The results from the first year's publicity are too good to be permitted to stale in the least, but we can only retain and increase them through renewed effort. The secretary will be pleased to mail a special subscription form to anyone making request, and also a copy of the new circular describing our direct service aids up-to-date.

In a letter just received from William L. Rock, of the William L. Rock Flower Co., Kansas City, Mo., that gentleman says: "We shall be only too glad to subscribe $200 per annum for the next four years. We feel that the campaign so far as it has gone, has done a great deal toward building up the florists' business. Of course, we have no way of checking or telling the amount of business derived from this source. It seems very clear to us, however, that if double the amount were spent next year, it would be money well spent, and believe that the smaller florists throughout the country will soon recognize its value and possibly will subscribe a larger amount than they have in the past."

If every florist would view our project in the same way, the support would be such as to make the complete attainment of our object an easy matter, and business for all would be increased to a remarkable extent. Begin the New Year well—send in a subscription, and use our direct service aids.

JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

"Greenhouses; Their Construction."

"Greenhouses; Their Construction and Equipment," by W. J. Wright, Director New York State School of Agriculture, Alfred University, is a recently issued book of 286 pages, cloth bound, and contains 131 illustrations. The volume is intended to meet a demand for information about greenhouses, covering in a definite, concise way different forms of construction, heating and equipment, together with the probable cost. The data given is based upon the experience and observations of many practical greenhouse builders and owners throughout the country, extending over a number of years. Included in the contents are chapters devoted to general considerations, structural materials, glazing and painting, beds, benches and walks, hot water installation, boilers and fuels, concrete construction, ventilation, steam installation, heating, erecting, water supply, irrigation, etc.

CHRISTMAS DEMAND VERY SATISFACTORY.

In spite of a few minor obstacles, Christmas business for 1918 can be reported as very satisfactory by nearly all concerned. Weather conditions up to December 24 were ideal for plantmen, growers and retailers, as it was warm enough to avoid heavy packing and wrapping, and saving the grower a good deal of coal, besides helping to hasten on the crops for the great rush. Being cloudy, it had bad effects on the sweet peas and violets, which did not come on as quickly as anticipated. The supply of roses was good and the quality and demand likewise. Small lots of snapdragons and calendars found ready sale. Stevia was very plentiful, but the increased demand took care of it. The only flower which at the eleventh hour could not hold its own was the carnation. There was more than one good reason for this. Due to a recurrence of the flu, they found ready sale since Thanksgiving at good prices, reaching the $10 per 100 mark a week before the Christmas rush. The wholesalers, who were booking orders, were somewhat dubious about the supply, and in trying to get the growers to make good, gave hopes for overhead of returns. Then came a mild spell, increasing the cut a good deal more than anticipated, and with a great many retailers refusing to push them, while others countermanded their orders, resulted in an accumulation of stock after December 25, which would have made a well man sick. To make matters worse, we were treated to a genuine blizzard December 24, which kept many prospective buyers at home. While the supply of pot plants locally was deficient in variety, it was well taken care of in quantity. Cyclamens, begonias, poinsettias, orange trees, Jerusalem cherries, heather, and made-up baskets and hampers comprised the list. The local plantmen sold out long before the great day, leaving those who never hustle, in a position to take what the early birds did not want. Due no doubt to the exorbitant prices asked for holly, little found its way into this market, thus creating a brisk demand for boxwood and other greens. Christmas trees were not nearly as plentiful as in former years and prices asked and received, rather high. The writer has heard of several cases where people helped themselves to evergreens which adorned private and public places.

NOTES.

H. W. Koerner, the well-known Wauwatosa grower, who has supplied the local market with the best dahlias, gladioli, and peonies in the past, has sold his entire business to his nephew, E. F. Stabelfeldt, who took possession a short time ago. Mr. Koerner started in the florist business in 1896 in a very small way with one greenhouse, 16x50 feet on the south side. The second year he began to raise gladioli and soon realized that it was the coming flower to improve on. Four years later he purchased 15 acres of good land on the Burleigh road, just west of Wauwatosa avenue and began specializing in this flower, dahlias and peonies with such remarkable success that today he is retired, living in a handsome bungalow at 5405 Washington boulevard. He worked up a good trade in producing high grade cut flowers and bulbs, and his successor, Mr. Stabelfeldt, has promised to keep up and continue the business in like manner.

In making the rounds among the down town retailers December 20, the writer found all windows arrayed in gorgeous colors, which were bound to attract the eye, and get the business. Especially attractive were the stores of Wm. Zimmermann, Currie Bros. Co., Edelsen-Leideger Co., Baumgartner's,

J. M. Fox & Son, and M. A. McKenney & Co.

The A. F. Kellner Co. reports business as very satisfactory for the holiday trade and way ahead of last year. While they did not use so many Christmas trees for interior decorating, they did well in wreaths made of boxwood, evergreen and the different varieties of spruce and pine.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. had a large lot of blooming plants in prime condition for the holidays, which were marked sold earlier than in former years. Their roses, carnations and cut poinsettias also hit it right.

Besides waiting on trade for the Christmas rush, Rich Leitz was swamped with funeral work, December 22-23, at a time when it was least appreciated.

The Holton & Henkel Co. had more cyclamens than ever before, but like all the other pot plants, including many well grown ferns, were easily disposed of.

Since Christmas, the number of deaths due to the influenza has diminished greatly, thus reducing the call for stock for funeral work.

F. Ernst, at Thirty-seventh and North avenue, says it was a pleasant Christmas with him, due to the high price of cut flowers.

The regular florists' club meeting will be held January 2, at which time the officers for 1919 will be installed.

PUBLICITY MEETING.

The meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, to be held January 7, in the Hotel Adelphia, Thirteenth and Chestnut streets, is to be made a special occasion. The feature of the evening will be the opening gun of the Society of American Florists' publicity campaign for 1919, what has been accomplished, and their plans for the coming year. The meeting will be addressed by ex-President Chas. H. Totty, Secretary John Young, Major F. F. O'Keefe, Wallace R. Pierson and F. Gude. An exhibition of commercial cut flowers, new and standard varieties, will be an attractive feature.

It is desired, and an invitation is hereby extended to all the trade who can make it convenient, particularly those who have Philadelphia for their market, to attend this important meeting. Retail store men will be particularly interested in the address of Major F. F. O'Keefe, whose slogan, "Say it with Flowers," has done so much to benefit the trade. Wallace R. Pierson is one of the brightest and most practical men in the craft. A line from him is worth more than a page of theory. President Totty and Secretary Young, who have given so much of their time and best effort to this movement, will tell of its success, while W. F. Gude, who so ably guards the interests of the craft in Washington, and as President of the F. T. D. keeps the members

PLANT SALES OFFSET HIGH PRICES.

While the volume of the 1918 Christmas business figured in dollars and cents was equal to that of last year, the sale of flowers was much curtailed, due to high prices. The supply on hand was ample to meet all calls and a good business in this line might have been recorded had prices been anything near like in other years. Many shipments arrived the day before Christmas, crowding the market. Had they arrived earlier, they might have had better returns. Artificial arrangements and fancy plants sold well in the place of cut stock, as the showing in return for $5 was so much greater. On the other hand, it is natural that with the steadily increased cost of production, the grower had to get more for his stock and as it is, he is not much ahead on his year's business. What effect the high prices will have on the cut flower business later, remains to be seen. There was little demand for lily of the valley or orchids as the corsage business was light. Since Christmas, the call for flowers has been limited. No extra business is looked for for New Year's and prices have dropped considerably.

CUSTOMERS BALK AT HIGH PRICES.

Christmas business was satisfactory only from a monetary standpoint the total sales being larger than last year, but the public did not buy as freely as in other years as prices asked were too high and many visitors to the flower shops walked out without purchasing. Plants sold better as these were more moderately priced in most cases. Retailers who invested in flowers in large quantities were still using them up on Saturday in funeral work. Local wholesalers fared better. Some were cleaned up on carnations, while roses lagged. With others the reverse was true. Easter lilies and callas did not come in for a heavy demand. Violets, sweet peas, freesias and calendulas cleaned up well but this stock was limited in supply. Taken as a whole, the Christmas supply was a generous one—more so than indications, previous to the day promised. Greens were not in great demand. Orders for stock were taken conditionally, but in most instances were filled in full.

Walter Rokusek, of the Cleveland Cut Flower Co. has been on the sick list for several days. C. F. B.

Bristol, Tenn.

Owing to the extremely heavy death rate, occasioned by the epidemic of influenza, there has been a continued and unusual demand for flowers for funeral designs and hospital and sick rooms, which has kept the market cleaned up for practically three months. Even though the production was greater this year than in the past, the supply has been far from adequate. The return of the soldiers also has brought numerous weddings. P. S. W.

EARLY DEMAND POOR FOR NEW YEAR'S.

The early demand is poor for New Year's and, judging from the conditions at the time of going to press, Tuesday, December 31, it would not be at all surprising if the market cleaned up completely in all lines. Trade was somewhat quiet the latter part of last week, in fact since after Christmas and up to the first of the week, but the lull did not affect the market to any great extent, for the supply was limited and there were plenty of buyers for what little stock was offered. The market cleaned up completely in almost all lines for Christmas, especially as far as good fresh stock was concerned, but the heavy snowstorm of December 24 affected trade to a great extent and cost the growers a good many dollars in returns. Many of the shipments to the market on that day that were due in the morning did not arrive until late in the afternoon, owing to the big storm, which had a tendency to weaken the prices somewhat on some items, especially carnations, which dropped considerably in price. The Christmas business as a whole was one of the best ever and while here and there one hears a complaint or two the majority of the dealers were quite well satisfied. The shipping trade was very heavy, but a number of cancellations were received at the last minute and quite a number of complaints since Christmas. The out-of-town demand has taken a big change for the better at this writing and the local call is also showing a great improvement. American Beauty roses are in good demand and are cleaning up nicely at high prices, including the eastern stock that is being handled by one of the local houses. Roses in general are in short supply and command good prices.

Lieutenant John Poehlmann.
Of Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago.

Some fine Killarney are to be had now in larger quantities in the short and medium grades. Mrs. Chas. Russell and Columbia are having a brisk call and the same holds true for all the other offerings in roses, especially Ophelia, which are arriving in exceptionally fine condition. Carnations are a trifle more plentiful and naturally have dropped accordingly in price since Christmas, but fancy stock in some varieties seems to be holding firm at prices hovering around the $8 to $10 mark, but the majority are being moved at figures a great deal lower. Orchids are seen in larger numbers and the same holds true for lilies and callas. White and yellow narcissi are more plentiful and the receipts of freesias are steadily increasing. Sweet peas, violets, calendulas, snapdragons, gardenias, candytuft, stocks, lily of the valley, mignonette, pansies, stevia and other miscellaneous stock is included in the offerings.

CHRISTMAS IN THE RETAIL STORES.

The majority of the retail florists report that their Christmas trade was very good and in some instances the best they have ever experienced notwithstanding the high prices and the general scarcity of stock. The heavy snowstorm of December 24 affected trade considerably and meant a loss of hundreds of dollars in sales, especially to the loop florists, who suffered the most. While the storm affected the down-town establishments to a great extent it helped the dealers in the outskirts, who reaped a harvest and are more than pleased with the amount of business that they did. The heavy snowstorm made late deliveries difficult and according to one dealer an auto load of some fifty orders cost him over $1 each to have them reach their destination. Others report a great deal of costly trouble and some of the dealers absolutely refused to make deliveries and allowed a special reduction to all those who took their stock home with them. Cyclamens and poinsettias were the principal offerings in the plant line, together with combination baskets of foliage and blooming stock. A few azaleas were seen, also Scotch heather and begonias. Roses had a good call and cleaned up quickly at the high prices asked, but the demand for carnations was not so brisk and considerable pushing was necessary to move them at the prices that had to be realized in order to leave a profit. Holly was so scarce the week before Christmas and so high in price that some of the dealers decided to eliminate it altogether from their list, which accounted for the absence of it in many of the stores. Some of those who decided to leave it alone altogether changed their minds at the last minute when it was available on the street at $5 per case and used it in the place of winter berries, which were exceedingly scarce and made a splendid substitute when the foliage was stripped off, especially where it was heavily berried. Southern holly and California holly were also in brisk demand owing to absence of the usual large supply of

Made-up wreaths never had such a heavy call as this Christmas, nor did made-up baskets of ruscus and other stock in this line appropriate for holiday use. Notwithstanding the reports one hears from all the retail florists in regard to the great volume of business that they enjoyed some are inclined to think that it was not as brisk as one is led to believe and while it was extra good considering conditions, it could have been a whole lot better.

J. F. Ammann and wife, of Edwardsville, returned home this week after spending a delightful visit with their daughter here over the holidays. Mr. Ammann was entitled to a vacation, for he was Chairman of the Exemption Board, No. 1, in Madison county, which is the second largest in the state and kept him more than busy at all times. As president of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists he will now have enough work to keep him busy during his spare time to make the thirty-fifth annual convention, to be held at Detroit, Mich., next August, a complete success.

Harry E. Dorigan, manager of Dorigan Bros., who conduct a retail establishment in the Columbus theatre building at 6242 South Ashland avenue, expects that his brother and business partner, Chas. C. Dorigan, who is a sergeant in the aviation department and now stationed at Canfield, Tex., will be back on the job again in the near future. He has two other brothers in the service, John, who is now at Norfolk, Va., and Owen, who is at Waco, Tex.

Louis Klemm, who has been with the colors at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Ind., with the engineering corps, has been honorably discharged from the army and is now managing the business formerly conducted by his father, Louis Klemm, Sr. His brother, Edward, was also in the engineering department and stationed at the same camp.

Henry Arnold, formerly with O. A. & L. A. Tonner, who is now stationed at the Great Lakes naval training station, is wearing a gold stripe on his sleeve. He was on the battleship Massachusetts for a time, but is anxious to get back into civil life now that the great struggle is over.

Mandy Doetsch, formerly with the George Witthold Co., who is a member of the Thirty-fifth Infantry, has returned to San Antonio, Tex. after spending several days here with relatives and friends. He recently had an addition to his family in the shape of a brand new Red Cross nurse.

Bill Stielow, of Niles Center, who is with the American troops in France is safe after serving 21 days in the front line trenches and going over the top once. His brother Arthur is also overseas serving with the Blackhawk division shortly before the armistice was signed.

Michael Freres is back on the job at Zech & Mann's store after being confined to his home for over a week with the Spanish influenza.

N. J. Wietor's two sons, Harry and Leo, who are attending Pionono College at St. Francis, Wis., are home for the holidays.

Morris Grossberg, of the Grossberg-Tyler-Finnermann Co., will leave this week on an out-of-town business trip.

George Reinberg, Jr., son of George Reinberg, well-known wholesale florist and grower, died Monday, December 30, from pneumonia at the age of 25. The funeral was held Wednesday, January 1, at 2:30 p. m., from the Reinberg home at 2057 Balmoral avenue, to St. Gregory's church, thence to St. Henry's cemetery. It was largely attended and the floral offerings from members of the trade, who unite in extending their heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, were many and beautiful.

A. L. Vaughan, of A. L. Vaughan & Co., wife and daughter Thelma will leave sometime this month to spend a few weeks in Florida. Mr. Vaughan has been on the job early and late for the past year and is entitled to a well-earned rest.

Martin Schoepfle, son of John Schoepfle, 923 Belmont avenue, who is with the colors at Camp Jackson, S. C., spent the holidays with his folks here. He was confined to bed with a severe cold during the greater part of his stay.

A Christmas tree famine put belated purchasers in this city at the mercy of the dealers who controlled the scanty supply. A peddler at Dearborn and South Water streets demanded $10 for a tree of ordinary size. Grocery stores around the city sold them the last few days for $2.50 to $6 each, according to size. Branches of trees sold for $2 and some people who were unable to buy them at any price bought whatever scrub trees they could get as long as they were green and gladly paid whatever price was asked so the kids would not be disappointed. Some who were desperate went out to private estates and chopped them off the lawns. The scarcity was laid to the shortage of labor in the forest districts, but probably the chief reason is that those who handled them in former years lost money.

D. H. Musser, of Miller & Musser, Commander of Waldron-Murphy Camp, No. 29, U. S. W. V., and president of the Cook County Bolo Club, was one of the men whose portraits appeared in the new monthly publication known as the United States War Veteran, which is the official organ of the above mentioned organization.

John Alles, son of Gust Alles, who has been with Wietor Bros. for a number of years, is with the American troops in France where he arrived just one day too late to participate in the fighting. Mr. Alles' son Nicholas is also with the colors and is at present stationed in the West Indies.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association had several long distance telephone calls this week from out-of-town wholesale houses who were in the market for stock, which Manager Klingsporn takes for granted means that a scarcity still exists in some sections of the country.

It has been Joseph Foerster Co. since January 1, when the name replaced that of Kyle & Foerster. As mentioned previously in these columns, there is no change in the general conduct of the business.

H. B. Kennicott, of Kennicott Bros. Co., who has a farm in Florida, demonstrated this week that adiantum can be grown there and shipped here in condition to be placed on sale if packed properly.

The creditors of the W. H. Kidwell Co. will receive a second and final dividend of 15.6 per cent declared December 23. The first dividend of 20 per cent was made July 29.

John Schillo, of the Adam Schillo Lumber Co., has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his mother, whose death occurred December 28, at the age of 81 years.

John A. Michal is back in the wholesale and retail business at 7045 Stony Island avenue, which had been leased to his brother, Joseph Michal, for the past two years.

Raymond Ziska is back on the job at Joseph Ziska & Sons' store after being confined to his home for some time with a severe attack of Spanish influenza.

Percy Jones, Inc., reports that the demand for florists' supplies was exceptionally good all through December, especially during the holiday period.

Frank Jarel, formerly with Zech & Mann, who is stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, is enjoying a furlough.

Peter Reinberg reports that the shipping trade is holding up nicely, but there is room for improvement in the city demand.

C. L. Washburn says that business is exceptionally good at Bassett &

Washburn's store, especially in the shipping line.

Phil Schupp says that the fall and early winter season has been one of the best that J. A. Budlong ever experienced.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. report that sweet peas have been in good demand all season at high prices.

GOOD TRADE AT ADVANCED PRICES.

Christmas trade this year was very good considering prices charged. Carnations commanding $3 to $5 per dozen, violets $5 per 100 and lilies $5 per dozen. Poinsettias both in plants and cut flowers brought good figures. Pot plants and ferns of all kinds sold remarkably well, in fact better than in former years, the high prices asked for cut stock being the cause. Evergreens brought higher figures and more were sold than in former years. Christmas trees were taken at sight.

NOTES.

Alonzo Vose, for more than a quarter of a century identified with the florist business in this state, died December 28 from a complication of diseases. He was 69 years of age. He is survived by his widow, a daughter, and one son, Howard, who is in the business at Attleboro.

The Hogan Greenhouses supplied the trade with most of the poinsettias sold here and they were taken at good prices. H. A. T.

Detroit.HIGH PRICES WORK TO DISADVANTAGE.

Unique in many respects was the Christmas business experienced by the local trade. The conspicuous feature of it was the unqualified disapproval of former liberal flower buyers, of the abnormally high prices exacted for cut flowers, which to many, seemed prohibitive. The unusual prices prevailing for the previous two or three weeks led the public to believe that, for Christmas, their favorites would be beyond reach for most pocketbooks, and their attention was directed to artificial effects and plants. There developed nothing so certain as the general resentment of the public of the apparent profiteering of the florists, and yet the latter did all they could to correct the erroneous idea held by many that the higher prices meant higher and unjustifiable profits for the retailers. The answer was manifested by the constant call for plants, which included not only flowering kinds, but also ferns, palms, dracaenas, pandanus, and the combination of these in baskets for the more expensive effects. It is true many cut flowers were sold, but it is equally true that those florists, who wisely forgot their own usual profits and sold carnations and roses and even poinsettias at prices closely approaching those of a year ago, moved the greater part of the stock in those items. People hesitated when asked $5 a dozen for carnations, and when they did yield, did so complainingly, and the exorbitant prices asked for roses was alone responsible for their comparatively slow movement. The popularity of artificial effects came to the rescue of many florists who were short of plants and could not, by their high prices, sell many cut flowers. There was a good but insufficient stock of plants, and never before were they so popular and yet florists got good prices for them and to a considerable extent offset their losses sustained by handling cut flowers. The weather, prior to Tuesday, was clear and favorable for shopping, but a heavy, continuous downpour of rain with high winds prevailed till nearly midnight Tuesday, and to this alone is assigned the cause for the comparatively poor business of that day, yet, the volume of business done when computed in dollars, this year, with most florists is in excess of that of a year ago. No hardships or losses in the delivery of things were met this year, due to favorable weather, and shipments from outside points arrived without serious delay. All are glad the days of exceptional mental strain are over and echoes are still heard of the various experiences of florists. The comments of some of them follow:

E. A. Fettes: "Our trade about equalled that of last year at our downtown store, while the up-town store did a larger business. Plants were very popular and we sold out completely in that line. Cut flowers were very high priced and we found it hard to reason with prospective buyers and the result was not satisfactory. I fear a re-action of the attempts of the trade to force abnormally high prices on the public to the detriment of future business. I would welcome a thorough discussion of this subject at our club meetings."

A. Pochelon: "The prices on cut flowers were too high to meet the approval of the public and yet I think present and near future conditions will not warrant much of a reduction. We had a splendid trade, but our novelties in Christmas effects, made up with artificial materials and greens, were the real money-makers, and it is unfortunate and unfair that such profits should be used to pay the excessive prices the cut flower growers exacted of us."

W. B. Brown: "We sold out completely and had a good business in plants and magnolia wreaths. Cut flowers were too high priced to find favor with my trade and I accordingly encouraged the sale of plants of which I had a fine stock. The only artificial flowers we sold were those used in trimming magnolia and boxwood wreaths."

Philip Braitmeyer: "The best Christmas trade we ever had, despite the rain of Tuesday, which gave us some time to handle our orders. Our gain over last year was fully 50 per cent and our prices were made satisfactory to our patrons."

H. W. Metz (Broadway Flower Shop): "I have no complaints to make. I sold everything I had, and was well paid for them. I was very busy, but handled the rush satisfactorily."

J. K. Stock: "We sold no artificial flowers, but did a big trade in plants, and had none left. Cut flowers were not a factor in this, the best Christmas we ever had."

J. Reuss: "We did a better business than a year ago, but chiefly in plants. Cut flowers were too high to be popular. Wreaths of artificial flowers sold specially well."

John Corey: "I am well satisfied. Had a good trade but the high prices of cut flowers was detrimental to the business, and I fear its baneful effect."

P. Pape: "We had a big business in both plants and cut flowers. Violets alone moved slowly, and of these we had an excess."

NOTES.

The sympathy of the trade is extended to Charles Warncke, Sr., and wife, who lost their only son, Charles Warncke, Jr., by an attack of influenza and pneumonia. He was 30 years old and died on Christmas day, which makes the grief of the sorrowful parents the more poignant. The funeral was private, but many florists went to the cemetery, and the local trade sent many floral tokens. Among them was one from the florists' club.

The next meeting of the florists' club will be held at Hotel Statler, Wednesday evening, January 8. Philip Breitmeyer will present a paper on "A Review of Christmas Business." The discussion of the paper will be complete and it is expected to bring out a big attendance.

J. F. S.

Newark, N. J.

It is a pleasure to find all the florists of this large, live and prosperous city well pleased with the Christmas business, and so far as we were able to reach them in a day's trip, that was practically the unanimous sentiment. At the store of the Rosery Floral Co., 167 Market street, it was stated that their Christmas business was more than twice as great as at Christmas, 1917. For the holiday trade, they employed 48 people and had six delivery cars running. They sold some special American Beauty roses for $50 per dozen and had no "kicking" on prices.

McLaughlin & Murphy, 181 Clinton avenue, stated that they never had a better Christmas, and that plants and cut flowers sold well. Asked about the effect of the high prices of cut flowers on customers, Joseph McLaughlin said: "Some of them did kick a little, but dug down and got the money." They have, in addition, been very busy with funeral work.

George Penek, 637 Broad street, stated that his business was several thousand dollars greater than in 1917. He did not handle violets, and so far as we could learn but few were handled by the local florists.

Charles Luthy, 363 Springfield avenue, had excellent business, particularly in plants. He is kept busy with funeral work and has recently purchased a nice delivery car.

Phillips Brothers, 938 Broad street, had fine business in both plants and cut flowers, being sold out in plants. Their business was much better than for Christmas, 1917.

Connelly & Plunket, Bloomfield and Mt. Prospect avenues, had all the business they could handle. James J. Plunkett, of this firm, is still at Camp Green, N. C.

CHRISTMAS BUSINESS MOST SATISFACTORY.

The feature of the past week was, of course, the Christmas business. There had been much discussion pro and con regarding the volume of business to be expected, whether there would be flowers enough, and if prices would not be prohibitive. Events proved that the pros won, as the volume of business was greater than ever before, the supply of cut flowers was sufficient, except in a few things, and while prices ranged about 20 per cent above those of the previous two weeks, the best stores were able to handle all they required at a very good profit. People, the past year, have been gradually educated up to paying higher figures for almost everything, and those who wanted flowers appeared to expect to pay more and, as a rule, responded cheerfully. Carnations, the poor man's flower, retailed at from $3.50 to $5 per dozen, wholesaling from $10 to $15 for whites and pinks, and up to $20 per 100 for the reds. Roses sold from $10 to $20 for medium grades, $25 to $40 for specials, and higher for the best. Russells and Hadleys, American Beauties were disappointing there not being near enough at $1 each. Cattleyas were the most plentiful choice flower, there being some carried over and prices ranged from 60 to 75 cents. Violets were below normal, all good stock bringing $2 for both single and double. Lilac sold up close at $2 per bunch. Callas and Easter lilies brought $25. The quality of all the stock was very good, there being nothing of a "briny" nature apparent. Carnations were exceptionally fine and came nearest of all stocks to supplying the demand. There was a wonderful out of town call, which, on account of the uncertainty of the supply, was hard to manage. High prices did not appear to frighten these distant from the market buyers who appeared not to care about prices if they could only be sure of getting their orders filled. Florida asparagus growers timed their shipments correctly, and the market was never better supplied with this necessary green. A few years ago such stock was a novelty; now the trade would not know what to do without it. All the hardy Christmas greens brought better prices than ever before. There was plenty of holly, loose and made up wreaths, but it seemed scarce and prices, at first ranged very high, $7.50 to $8 per case for poor stock. Later much better grades sold for $6, and even lower. Almost prohibitive prices were asked for Christmas trees that later were almost given away. The weather for the week before Christmas was ideal for shopping, with the exception of December 24, when it poured all day long. This, however, did not seem to interfere; in fact, many of the stores said if the day had been fine, they would have been swamped. As it was, they could scarcely manage the crowds. The plant men never had better shipping weather nor had a better cleanup in all classes of stock, particularly flowering plants. From all accounts, both wholesale and retail, the volume of business can safely be said to have been at least 10 per cent above that of last year. The high prices of cut flowers kept them out of

WITH THE WHOLESALERS.

The wholesale trade were unanimous in their good reports of the excellent business, the only drawback being the scarcity of flowers. The Leo. Niessen Co. handled enormous quantities of flowers and could have sold more. One wonders, in the light of the supposed scarcity, where they all came from. It was their largest Christmas.

Hard work to get through or supply the trade satisfactorily on account of the scarcity of stock, was the situation at Berger Bros. They were, however, well satisfied with results.

Edward Reid was particularly strong on carnations, for which he found good demand. Roses were also handled in quantity. "All the business we could care for," was his report.

The Jos. Heacock Co. reported they could have sold much more stock. Had to cut down nearly all orders and prices are holding up remarkably since the holidays.

NOTES.

Robert Crawford said business never had been better. Choice plants and arranged baskets sold well. T. Nelson Geiger reported the best Christmas he has ever had. George Craig was very well satisfied, could have sold more even at the high prices. Julius Wolff, J. Wolf Moore, Joseph Josephs, Victor Ridenour, John C. Gracey and other uptown florists all reported a very satisfactory Christmas business, in some cases considerably ahead of last season.

H. H. Battles, the S. S. Pennock Co. and J. J. Habermehl's Sons did an enormous business in fancy plant baskets and cut flowers. The London Flower Shop had a splendid line of choice flowering and foliage plants and arranged baskets of plants. Business was exceptionally good. Charles Stahl, in his well stocked store, was particularly well pleased with his Christmas trade, selling up close on everything.

Charles H. Grakelow was particularly well pleased with results, the best Christmas he has ever experienced. M. J. Callahan reported a great business, and that all the trade in West Philadelphia had done well. E. W. Geahring said that his neighborhood, and up into Frankford, had enjoyed a wonderful demand. He had never had a better Christmas.

Frank M. Ross' three stores which were ideally stocked for the middle class buyers, to which trade he caters, did a very large business. He lays his plans well ahead, and his stock was complete in all lines. K.

CHRISTMAS BUSINESS GENERALLY GOOD.

The trade as a whole should be well pleased with the results of the Christmas business. The growers, that almost everything sold well and that mild weather was in their favor; the wholesalers, that generally speaking, they "cleaned up" at good prices; the retailers, that notwithstanding extremely high prices, the public bought liberally. Alluding particularly to the wholesale trade, the supply of stock was larger than might have been expected, larger, we believe, than most of the wholesalers expected it would be. Although there had been talk of a rose shortage, there were plenty of roses—If prices were to be maintained at the high figures for which they sell. In orchids, there was a heavy supply on the market, cattleyas, cypripediums and oncidiums being all well represented. Orchid prices did not reach a high level, $75 per 100, wholesale, being the highest for the best cattleyas, while the smaller types went as low as $25 and $35. The child is yet unborn that will live to see the day when there will be no fault-finding in the wholesale district of this city over Christmas and Easter business. This year, carnations, so to speak, were the Jonahs. In the first instance, all through the fall, there was general complaint about the poor keeping qualities of carnations. These complaints reached us from wholesalers, retailers and the public. In common with the general trend, carnations were started at high figures for the Christmas trade; $15 and $20 per 100 for Mrs. Ward and reds and $12 to $15 for white, Enchantress and other pink varieties. If the stock had been good and properly handled, there would have been little complaint. But much of it was neither good nor well handled. On December 24, a flood of carnations reached the market that were about ready to go to sleep. By that evening they went begging at $6 per 100, with practically no buyers. The violet situation was little, if any better, and we will here remark that the way violets are handled for and in this market, is little short of a confidence game on the public. For weeks, a very light supply of violets had been arriving, the report being that the crop was off. Just before Christmas, prices were boosted to $3 per 100, higher prices being asked. For Christmas a flood of stock came in that had evidently been in "pickle," and as every one knows, a stale violet is no good. A good many were bought under protest—at the high prices, but by Christmas morning they were a drug. The results of this Christmas business have shown that the public will pay high prices for good flowers, but it is the wrong kind of "publicity" to impose on the public. In lilies, lily of the valley and Paper White narcissus, the movement was scarcely above normal. For prices held firm. There was a small stock of chrysanthemums on the market, but as one wholesaler, who had the best ones, remarked: "Nobody seemed to want them." In sweet peas, good prices were paid for good flowers. There was a movement in minor stocks, such as snapdragons, bouvardia, marigolds, cut pansies, etc., but that was merely an incident of the trade. Roses led the market and kept the lead to the finish. One hundred and fifty dollars per 100 for special American Beauties was good money; $100 for the best Hadleys and $20 to $40 for specials of other sorts according to the variety, should be a cause for satisfaction to growers and wholesalers. There was quite a movement in the best gardenias at $6 per dozen. As a matter of course, the retail stores that cater to a salaried population, could not handle the special roses that were in the Broadway, Fifth and Madison avenue stores, and which sold at from $9 to $15 per dozen. As a consequence, there was a great demand for extras and No. 1s and 2s, which brought unusually high prices for such stock. The poorest No. 2s brought $8 and $10 per 100, wholesale, and there were sales of No. 1s as high as $25 per 100. Our market table of December 28, with possibly a few minor exceptions, gives the Christmas prices. A comparison of this Christmas trade with that of last or former years, cannot well be made on account of the unusual conditions; i. e., a lighter supply of good cut stock, its high prices and the general disposition of retailers to push plants to the limit. We will rest on the statement that business was good.

December 30.—Business was active in the wholesale district this morning, due in part to a light supply of stock, prices being firm. The outlook is for continued high prices. The weather is cool but clear, which if continued, may somewhat increase the supply.

NOTES.

Don Marquis, whose column, the "Sun Dial," in the "Evening Sun," is a source of interest to many of its readers, writes that he has found in George Bingham, editor, proprietor and chief writer of the "Hogwallow Kentuckian," the only man we ever knew who was able to make all the different kinds of scientific experts in the various bureaus and departments at Washington work for him personally. The way it began was that Bingham's congressman sent him a lot of "well-bound government publications dealing with dry farming." As all the farming in his neighborhood was "wet," and yet he wanted to make some use of the books, he filled up a hole in the side of the barn door that gathered water when it rained with them. "But there weren't quite enough books, so he wrote to Washington for some treatises on hog cholera. He got them and put them to good use." By that time his ambition was fired and he decided to build a causeway from the back door to the cowshed. He began it with volumes from the bureau of crop estimates and drew on the bureau of soils and the bureau of entomology and several other bureaus by the time he had it finished. After that, according to Don Marquis, he didn't have to send for any more books, they just kept coming. The word seems to have gone around among the government experts in Washington that a real scientific farmer had been discovered, and he got all the books he needed. Seeing that books were coming in so fast, he decided to build a road around his place, for which the office of public roads and rural engineering, the bureau of markets, the federal horticultural board and the bureau of animal industry furnished the material. At first, he laid them flat, but finding that he had a plenty, he began to lay them edgewise. "Books make a better road that way," says George. "Stand 'em up on end and wet 'em, or wait till the first rain wets 'em, and they sort o' gum together and get solid—solidier and solidier as time goes on. The road around my place is just as good as if it had been laid with Belgian blocks."

Previous to Christmas, Alex. M. Westwood, the Pennsylvania Terminal Florist, sent a letter to each of his regular customers, of which the following is a copy: "The high prices for cut flowers are caused by the coal shortage. The 50 per cent cut in coal consumption has resulted in less than one-half the usual supply, which in the face of a larger demand than ever, means prices that the retail florist is helpless to reduce or control."

Arrivals of cut stock were light for the remainder of the week following Christmas, and on December 28 prices were near the Christmas average. Special American Beauties wholesaled at the rate of $125 per 100 and all other roses were firm, with carnations $8 to $12 per 100. Violets were the exception at $1 to $1.50.

We have received from the Colonial Florist, Broadway and 157th street, a handsome calendar for 1919. We do not set up for art experts, but we like the engraving, "In The Days of Peace," a scene in the garden at Mount Vernon, much better than most of the pictures in the Fifth avenue art shops.

On December 26, in honor of the sailors of the returned fleet, who paraded on Broadway, the store of David Clarke's Sons was handsomely decorated with a number of large American flags. They had the finest decoration noticed on that part of Broadway, and none better was seen anywhere. Horace E. Foment, 148 West 28th street, had, considering conditions, an exceptionally large stock of roses in variety that sold well. He said that, personally he would have preferred to have seen stock a little cheaper and had the buyers better pleased.

The next meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held in the Grand Opera House building, Eighth avenue and 23rd street, on the night of January 13, 1919. It will be "Inauguration night" and great goods are expected.

Arthur J. Olson, of W. S. Lee's staff, is exhibiting with considerable satisfaction, a German helmet captured and sent him by his brother, Lieut. William C. Olson, with the overseas forces, and who was formerly in the florist business.

Richard Wenham, 76 East 93rd street, had a Christmas decoration at the home of Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., 666 Fifth avenue, representing the world upside down, which seemed quite appropriate for the times in which we live.

C. A. Ladiges, 1792 Amsterdam avenue, has recently received a letter from the chairman of the Liberty Loan committee, congratulating him for his good work in the Fourth Liberty Loan.

Meyer Othlie, of Riedel & Meyer, Inc., who was taken ill, as reported in our issue of December 21, has completely recovered, and has returned to business.

At the T. F. Galvin store, Fifth avenue and 46th street, Manager Wiloughby and Mr. Hale, his assistant, stated that they had a good plant trade and also sold many cut orchids.

Long stem and well flowered poinsettias, were a feature at William Kessler's, 113 West 28th street. He also handled a fine stock of poinsettias in pans.

P. F. McKenney, Fifth avenue and 42nd street, says that prices were too high for good business. He states that many of the carnations were worthless.

A feature at the store of John Young & Co., 53 West 28th street, was the large stock of orchids and gardenias, for which there was a good demand.

The firm of Goldstein & Futterman, 107 West 28th street, has been dissolved. The business will be continued under the name of Futterman Bros.

William P. Ford, 107 West 28th street, had quite a lot of Iris tinctoria, also white lilac that brought good returns.

Joseph A. Millang, 55-57 West 26th street, handled a fine stock of American Beauty and Francis Scott Key roses.

J. K. Allen, 118 West 28th street, had a good stock of Russell, Sunburst and the Killarney roses and sold out.

P. J. Smith, 131 West 28th street, had good Hadley roses and other leading varieties, which were good sellers.

Traendly & Schenck, 436 Sixth avenue, had excellent roses in variety and orchids and sold out well.

George J. Polykras, 104 West 28th street, had a fine lot of pink snapdragons which sold well.

John W. Hauser, 571 Madison avenue, stated that his store was swept clean of plants.

Louis C. Paicek, of 2424 Eighth avenue, says that his Christmas business was good.

John J. Coan, 115 West 28th street, had a good stock of Paper White narcissus.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

USE of the seed tape device is said to be increasing.

DUTCH exporters say Holland mail takes four to six weeks.

FERTILIZER prices are not likely to advance further for the present.

THE low prices of table onions are not favorable to the onion seed market.

ONION SETS in the Chicago district are quoted at $2.00 for colors, whites $2.60, in car lots.

DUTCH BULBS are well sold out, especially the better grades of hyacinths, tulips and daffodils.

THE C. Herbert Coy Seed Co., Valley, Neb., is mailing its customers a very attractive calendar for 1919.

THE general crop of beans in the United States is reported at 133 per cent compared with that of 1917.

LONGFELLOW bean is said to be a good second choice for those who can not procure Early Red Valentine.

THE holiday prices for bouquet green have been well maintained, this material being in strong demand for dyeing.

"HARVESTING Soy-Bean Seed" is the title of Farmers' Bulletin 886, recently issued by the United States department of agriculture.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE, Chicago, advise that their travelers, T. D. Long and Geo. Mohn, start out on their winter journey this week.

E. C. DUNGAN, representing Wm. Henry Maule, of Philadelphia, Pa., is in Chicago this week, superintending the mailing of his firm's catalogues.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade December 31 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00; $10.75 per 100 pounds, no change from last week.

CLEVELAND, O.—A. C. Kendel's Seed Store, which has been located at 2010 Ontario street for the past 66 years, has removed to commodious new quarters at 216 Prospect avenue, S. E.

TOLEDO, O.—Clover closed 10 cents lower December 28 at $25.50, a gain of 75 cents during the week. Cash timothy was 5 cents lower, selling at $5.00; December, $5.00; January, $5.05, and May $5.20.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. S. Michael, of the Sioux City Seed & Nursery Co., Sioux City, Ia.; C. O. Wilcox, representing Wood, Stubbs & Co., Louisville, Ky.; A. H. Luck, representing S. M. Isbell & Co., Jackson, Mich.

MRS. M. W. JOHANSEN and sons have discontinued their connection with the Johansen Seed Co., of Los Angeles, and will in the future conduct their business under the title of the Johansen Sons' Co., at El Monte, Calif. Mrs. Johansen expects to start on a regular eastern trip early in January.

Canary Seed.

The war trade board has announced that the restrictions upon the importation of canary seed have been removed and that applications for licenses to import same will now be considered.

B. F. L.

Catalogues Received.

J. Bolgiano & Son, Baltimore, Md., seeds; Weeber & Don, New York, seeds; Holmes-Letherman Seed Co., Canton, O., seeds; Henry Field Seed Co., Shenandoah, Ia., seeds; Carnation Support Co., Connersville, Ind., plant supports; Deposit Seed Co., Deposit, N. Y., seeds.

Washington Rulings and Regulations.

The war trade board announces that plants, trees, shrubs and vines (including bulbs) have been removed from the list of Restricted Imports No. 1, and licences will hereafter be issued freely, provided the applications are otherwise in order.

Official announcement has just been made of the lifting of all remaining regulations and restrictions heretofore imposed by the priorities division of the war industries board. The order issued by Judge Edwin B. Parker, chairman of this division, reads as follows: "Effective January 1, 1919, all the rules, regulations and directions of every nature whatsoever, issued by the priorities division of the war industries board are hereby cancelled, and all pledges heretofore made on the suggestion or request of the said priorities division are hereby revoked."

B. F. L.

Plant Quarantine Modification Sought.

Following the approval by the department of agriculture of the drastic regulations of the federal horticultural board, announcement of which was made in these columns, issue of December 14, page 978, which will mean a total exclusion of many important plant importations, effective on and after June 1, 1919, horticultural interests in the United States have taken up the matter with the Belgian consulate for transmission to that country's legation at Washington, and are assured that all possible assistance will be forthcoming from that source as far as Belgian products are concerned, according to Winfred Rolker of August Rolker & Sons, New York.

As regards imports from Holland, in a bill recently offered by the Netherlands government to the United States authorities in charge of plant importations, attention is called to the fact that being fully aware of the necessity of giving the highest possible warrants as to the absence of insects and plant diseases, the phyto-pathological service of that country has, since official inspection of nurseries was first established in 1899, improved the work of inspection, and since 1910, certificates have been issued not on the mere results of inspection of grounds, but also from such time until all plants intended for export are being packed and shipped. Continuous inspection is made as far as possible on all nurseries in that country, and the application of controlling measures is encouraged with force. Attention is also called to the fact that the reports of American inspection authorities relating to importations of Holland nursery stock during 1913-1914 were most favorable, and in the few instances where suggestions were made, these did not apply to insects and plant diseases which might especially have been imported in balled plants.

April Showers.

Tommy's uncle had asked him the name of May's young man.

"I call him April showers," replied Tommy.

"April showers!" cried his astonished uncle. "Whatever makes you call him such a ridiculous name as that?"

"Because he brings May flowers," Tommy explained.

We call the special attention of Florists to the following:

NEW SCARLET SAGE

"America" or "Globe of Fire"

This is without doubt the finest Scarlet Sage ever sent out. It is the earliest to come into bloom, and flowers continuously till the end of the season, and what is equally as important, it is absolutely uniform in growth, about 15 inches high, with the brilliant scarlet spikes thrown well above the plant making a total height of about 2 feet. The seed we offer is our own saving. 50c per trade pkt.; $4.00 per oz.

Dreer's Superb Large Flowering Fringed Petunias

Our own unrivaled strain, and too well known to require description, we offer

Double-flowering fringed, 75c per 500 seeds; $1.50 per 1000 seeds.
Single-flowering fringed, 50c per trade pkt.

Our new Wholesale Price List, just issued, containing a complete list of all the Seeds, Plants and Bulbs we offer, has been mailed. If you did not receive a copy, we will be pleased to send one to any Florist on application.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, December 28.—Cucumbers, 2-dozen box, $3.50 to $5.00; celery, crate, $2.25 to $2.75; head lettuce, 2-dozen, $1.00 to $3.00; radishes, per dozen bunches, 75 to 85 cents; tomatoes, 6 baskets, $6.00 to $6.50.

New York, December 28.—Celery (state), per bunch, 50 to 90 cents; cucumbers, $1.00 to $2.75 per dozen; mushrooms, 75 cents to $2.00 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 12 to 30 cents; lettuce, per package, $1.50 to $4.50; radishes, per 100 bunches, $2.00 to $4.00.

Forcing Rhubarb.

Several factors of great importance are operative now in regard to rhubarb. One of these is the shortage of good apples; the other, the release of all sugar restrictions. Growers of rhubarb have long known that the price of apples has always to a great extent influenced the returns on rhubarb. In other words, the two crops move in "sympathy." With the great scarcity of sugar and restrictions for its use, rhubarb was not at its best as a money crop in recent years.

We have before stated in these columns that we doubt if forcing rhubarb is profitable if roots are produced with that aim in view only. But on a commercial scale, where rhubarb for market is grown regularly, it is good practice to plow out the roots every fifth year and force them. This means a new plantation each year. The old rhubarb patch will make an excellent piece of ground for any other crop. In fact, growers select their worst pieces of land, plant to rhubarb, mulch heavily, and in a few years a good piece of ground will result.

To get at the roots these days, a good heavy three-horse team and riding plow is the thing—better than a man and spade. As the roots or clumps are turned up, they are rolled on the eyes, that is, eyes down and roots up. In this position, they are easily stripped of surplus soil and cannot freeze as readily. It is good practice to allow them to remain in the field and catch a "couple of good frosts to ripen them. Unless the roots freeze some they do not force early. Where hot manure is easily obtained, a good practice is to pack the roots closely into cold frames, put on sash and boards to darken them, and bank the frames with manure to induce heat. For early results, however, it is better to build a hot-bed with a foot of manure under the roots as well as banking on the sides. Total darkness is essential, as light induces the leaves to expand at the expense of the stalks. For this reason, basements or cellars, where enough heat is procurable, make excellent places. Under greenhouse benches excellent rhubarb can be grown, provided the sides are darkened. Temperatures can be anywhere from 45° to 60°. The warmer the place the faster and also thinner the stalks will grow. As the winter wears away the roots become anxious to sprout and very little heat is needed in March, while in December and January 60° must be provided. After the roots are exhausted they are worthless except for the compost heap.

MARKETMAN.

Vegetable Markets.

Reports to the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, for the period ending December 25, showed volume of shipments continued to increase, with prices varying. Potato markets continued irregular, without uniform trend in prices. The outstanding feature was an advance of 25 cents in the Chicago carlot market, which reached $1.75-$1.85 per 100 pounds sacked. Other markets showed little change. Shipping sections were dull, with movement checked by weather conditions. Cabbage values were nearly steady in producing sections. New York Danish seed ruled $20 per ton bulk f. o. b. shipping sections, but averaged $5 lower in consuming markets, closing at $20-$27. Although shipments in onions are decreasing and commercial stocks appear much lighter than a year ago, the market continues draggy. The demand is reported slow and the tone weak. Choice sacked yellow stock held fairly steady in New York and New England shipping sections at $1.50-$1.65. In consuming centers there was little change, the average being $1.25-$1.85 per 100 pounds. The celery movement, principally from California and New York, continued in fairly heavy volume. New York Golden Heart advanced fully $1 in consuming markets, ranging $6-$7.50 per crate. California Golden Heart was steady at 65-75 cents per dozen bunches f. o. b. producing sections, and ranged $7.25-$8 per crate in consuming centers. Florida head lettuce advanced 25 cents at shipping points and reached $3.75-$4.75 in Boston, New York and Philadelphia. Bean prices were irregular but averaged fairly steady.

Boston.

PLANTS LEAD CHRISTMAS DEMAND.

The Christmas demand was much better than last year and early buyers had the choice of very fine stock, and there were a few complaints from late comers who had to be satisfied with inferior plants. Among the leaders in popularity were poinsettias, cyclamens, begonias, azaleas and camellias, all of which sold well at good figures. The cut flower demand was fair, but with a shortage and high prices, many purchasers turned to plant offerings. While some of the growers held out for $15 per 100 for carnations in light colors and $20 for reds, some of them were forced to sell at $8 Christmas eve. Roses were high and violets brought $3 per 100.

NOTES.

At a meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, December 17, the following officers were elected for 1919: A. K. Rogers, president; C. H. Sweetzer, vice-president; W. N. Craig, secretary; S. J. Goddard, treasurer.

At Philip Carbone's the Christmas demand completely cleaned up the plant supply of which he had a choice assortment. Cut flowers also moved well.

Abe Gluck, salesman for the New England Rose Co., is to be married January 15 and has bought a home in Winthrop, where he and his bride will reside.

The New England Rose Co. sent in a heavy cut of stock for the holiday trade. This firm will devote one large house to vegetables.

Welch Bros. Co. enjoyed a good holiday trade and disposed of a heavy supply of roses, gardenias, carnations and lilies.

B. A. Snyder & Co. report the best Christmas trade ever. Their new store was well adapted to the large business done.

At the store of Penn, The Florist, business was reported very good; in fact, ahead of previous years.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. reported excellent sales in artificial flowers and general stock. S. K. G.

The Nursery Trade

American Association of Nurserymen.

J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., President; J. Edward McOn, Norrisville, Pa., Vice-President; Curtis Nye Smith, 19 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Secretary and Counsel. Forty-four annual convention will be held at Chicago in 1919.

HOUSTON, TEX.—Landscape artists in this city report business as showing a much improved tone.

Plant Restrictions Need Modification.

With the stamp of approval of the United States department of agriculture affixed to the plant quarantine regulations recommended by the federal horticultural board governing the entry of nursery stock and other plants and seeds, under the order known as Notice of Quarantine No. 37, which becomes effective June 1, 1919, the horticultural interests of this country are brought face to face with restrictive measures that threaten the future trade in palms, azaleas, bay and box trees, etc. With various countries upon whom we have relied in the past for many of our supplies in both nursery stock and bulbs, maintaining highly organized inspection service, and the time necessary to produce a stock to meet American requirements, it was hoped that regulations less severe would suffice until a reasonable period had elapsed after the war to enable the horticultural interests of the country, both commercial and private, to readjust themselves. All appeals, however, have been in vain. There is hope, nevertheless, that proper presentation of the situation through diplomatic channels and proposed counter concessions, may lessen to some extent the severity of the order. Every effort should be made by all interested to secure an early modification of the restrictions to something less sweeping. Carry on!

Dwarf Conifers.

Of many of the cone-bearing trees there are abnormal dwarf forms, and a few conifers are naturally dwarf shrubs, according to the Arnold Arboretum Bulletin of November 22, 1918. The former are of different origin; most of them are seedlings, some have grown from buds on branches of large trees, and others have been produced by exposure to excessive cold and high winds, and these when transferred to more favorable surroundings often lose their dwarf habit. A good example of a dwarf of the last class is the depauperate larch which grows at the timber line on Mt. Fuji in Japan. Seedlings of this little plant raised in the arboretum 25 years ago are now nearly of the same size as the seedlings of the trees of the Japanese valleys raised at the same time. In the sandy swamps of Prince Edward Island black spruces not more than two feet high produce cones and fertile seeds, and near the timber line of the White Mountains it is possible to walk on dwarf mats of the balsam fir, which lower down on these mountains is a tall tree. Transferred to better soil where the winter climate is less severe these alpine and boreal dwarfs would soon assume the tree habit of the species. Dwarfs of some species, however, which evidently owe their habit to environment, retain the dwarf habit when transferred to more favorable surroundings. Such dwarfs are some of the forms of the European Pinus montana from high altitudes and some dwarf forms of junipers which reproduce the dwarf form in their seedlings. Seedling dwarfs have been produced by many different species, but they are naturally most numerous in species which have been largely raised in nurseries where seedlings are carefully watched and abnormal forms are preserved. It is not surprising, therefore, that trees like the eastern arbor vitae and the Norway spruce have produced many such forms

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

in nurseries as few other cone-bearing trees have been so largely raised from seed.

It is only in recent years that dwarf conifers have attracted much attention, for Loudon in his "Arboretum et Fruticetum Botanicum", published in 1838, enumerates only 10. These are two dwarf forms of Pinus montana, two forms of the Norway spruce, a dwarf cedar of Lebanon, a dwarf red cedar (Juniperus virginiana), a prostrate form of Juniperus sabina, and two dwarf forms of Juniperus communis. He knew no dwarf arbor vitae, chamaecyparis, hemlock, or dwarf form of abies. Beissner in the second edition of his "Handbuch der Nadelholzkunde," published in 1890, enumerates 104 dwarf conifers in 31 species; of these 25 are forms of the Norway spruce, eight are forms of Lawson's cypress (Chamaecyparis Lawsoniana), and eight are forms of the arbor vitae of the eastern United States. In addition to the plants enumerated by Beissner there are a few which originated in this country and which do not appear to have been known to him.

There is a good but by no means a complete collection of dwarf conifers in the arboretum, for it is difficult to keep track of the new forms which appear in the nurseries where large numbers of conifers are raised from seed and are often given names without descriptions, and some dwarfs like those of Lawson's cypress and the Chinese arbor vitae are not hardy here. The arboretum collection is much visited, however, by nurserymen for there is now a demand for these plants, which have their uses in small gardens and are less happily planted in making low banks of foliage about the base of suburban cottages.

The bulletin enumerates some 36 dwarf conifers, etc., at the arboretum, including Japanese pinus densiflora var. umbraculifera, Norway spruces vars. Clanbrasiliana, Gregoria, prostrata and Ellwangeriana; Picea pungens, Abies lasiocarpa, picea compacta, concolor and balsamea; Pinus Strobus, sylvestris and montana, the latter appearing in catalogues of nurserymen as P. pumilo and Mughus; the Douglas spruce (Pseudotsuga Douglasii var. globosa); hemlocks, Thuya compacta and Hovey, as well as Chamaecyparis obtusa, pisifera, obtusata and filifera. Among the junipers mentioned, are virginiana globosa, Kosteriana, chinensis, Pfitzeriana, Sargentii, sabina, horizontalis, conferta, procumbens and communis var. depressa.

CHRISTMAS TRADE SATISFACTORY.

Contrary to previous indications, the supply of cut flowers and plants, both of excellent quality, proved adequate to care for the local demand satisfactorily and the showing in the various stores seemed as plentiful and attractive as in former years. Poinsettias and cyclamens had a prominent place and in roses, Russell and Columbia were well to the front, taking the place of American Beauty to quite an extent, and commanding prices nearly as good. All stock brought from 50 to 100 per cent better returns than last year, the highest ever known in this market, but this did not seem to have any effect on the buying. The public seemed to expect to pay high prices. Carnations sold as high as $3 per dozen for reds, $2 for pink and white, and poinsettias brought as high as $1 each. Wicker baskets with handle holding from 12 to 15 choice bracts brought from $18 to $20, and there was a call for more than could be supplied. Some choice Russell roses went as high as $10 per dozen, while the few American Beauties on the market were taken at prices ranging from $18 to $24. There was some lily of the valley, small white stevia, narcissi, both white and yellow calendulas and a few lilies. There was also a good call for funeral work. The flower shops were all crowded for three days before Christmas.

NOTES.

The Joy Floral Co. had its stock in early and well arranged. Cyclamens seemed to be their feature in plants although they sold hundreds of poinsettias. These were in attractive baskets and brought good returns. The abundant supply of splendid cut flower stock had never been surpassed in former years. They had ample cuts to supply the Chattanooga branch and business in that city as well as locally was brisk.

Geny Bros. had a magnificent stock in every way and made a strong run on poinsettias, possibly the largest stock in this city in this item. American Beauty roses and choice carnations were also features of their display. They had a number of funeral orders December 24.

The McIntyre Floral Co. were well prepared with both plants and cut flowers, some of the finest roses of the season being seen here and which were disposed of early. Long stemmed Russell which sold for $15 per dozen were noteworthy.

L. H. Hurry & Son had a good Christmas stock and enjoyed a good holiday trade.

M. C. D.

Terre Haute, Ind.

Among the good stock sent in for the Christmas market were well-grown carnations from the Rosery, which were disposed of quickly at $2.50 per dozen.

Heinl & Weber disposed of two houses of poinsettias which were timed exactly right for the Christmas demand.

Cowan Bros. have been very busy with funeral work, many of the orders going out-of-town.

Fred Wunker had an enormous call for cemetery wreaths and madeup baskets.

GREATEST CHRISTMAS TRADE EVER.

The 1918 Christmas demand was the greatest ever experienced by the trade in this city and Council Bluffs and higher prices never prevailed. That there would be a shortage of stock was apparent a week previous when orders began to be received. The day before Christmas American Beauties sold for $40 per dozen, and while many orders were canceled when the price was announced other buyers paid that figure. On the afternoon of Christmas day, the few American Beauties remaining easily commanded $3 each. The spirit of peace seemed to have its effect and the stores were crowded from early morning until late at night. Mistletoe and holly brought double the price of former years.

POT PLANT PREPARATION.

Getting Ready for Spring.

There never was a time when the field of endeavor of the expert plantsman offered such opportunities as now. The days of the imported azalea and other flowering plants, which could be bought at reasonably low prices, and brought into flower in a short time, are among the things of the past; at least, this is so for the time being. We cannot tell what the future may bring forth, but we do know that the plantsman is now put on his mettle to produce pot flowering varieties to take the place of the imported stock as well as to meet the increased demand for all kinds of pot plants in bloom. The experience of the Christmas holiday season of 1918 is very plain evidence that the public demand for flowering plants is on the increase, especially when cut flowers are scarce and high priced. The question then arises, "What are the plantsmen going to furnish to make up for the shortage of azaleas, lilies and other flowering plants?" A larger number of home grown roses and hydrangeas can be grown, as well as many other plants not now generally met with in full bloom as retail flowering plants, and it will well repay any grower to make a close study of the many plants available and bring out something novel, even if it is some old-fashioned variety now almost forgotten.

To be successful with pot plants the grower must be prepared to give them the closest attention, have space enough for their best development and allow them a reasonable period of growth, so that they will be sturdy, well hardened plants of good form in fine bloom. Forced plants that are soft, so that they will suffer after being taken from the greenhouse, are poor material to offer for sale, being in the same class as "pickled" cut flower stock. It is always best to start up flowering plants in a moderately low temperature, so as to build up a sturdy foundation that will produce an abundance of bloom; then, when sufficient root action has taken place, as the plants approach the flowering period, the temperature must be raised to properly develop the flowers and to guard against mildew. After the buds commence to expand and show color, the plants should be treated to a moderate hardening off in a lower temperature to give texture and fine color to the blooms. This applies particularly to the rambler roses, but sudden extremes of temperature must be avoided at all times so as to guard against the buds dropping. It is, therefore, necessary to give this class of plants a reasonably long period of growth, and to be able to have them in good shape for Easter, which comes late in April this year, it is none too early to get them on the way.

To be successful in growing high grade pot plants, the grower needs the best space available to carry on his work, especially during the winter months. This particularly applies to rambler roses, hydrangeas or any other plants that are subject to mildew. Dark, low houses are not suited for the purpose, and the effort will only be successful in a half measure. It is also very essential that the houses be equipped with the necessary heating and ventilating facilities to meet the changing conditions of temperature.

Other requisites necessary for carrying on the work are: First, a good live, compost; second, an ample supply of the standard size pots to be on hand as they are needed, and it is always best, if possible, to use new clean pots for the final potting. The soil and other material to make up the compost, should be brought inside to become dry enough to properly handle before potting. When making up the compost, the mixture must be governed according to the class of plants it is to be used for. Hydrangeas and other vigorous, heavy rooting plants require a much heavier soil than begonias or other like plants. Provide, first of all, a live, loamy soil, a liberal amount of well-rotted manure, then, if procurable, some leaf mould and a clean, sharp sand. A small amount of fine charcoal, added to the compost to keep it open and sweet, is also beneficial to all of these plants.

Rambler Roses.

It takes from 12 to 15 weeks from the time these plants are started up to have them in good bloom for sale. Severe forcing will bring them in quicker, but the blooms will not be nearly as fine or lasting as those brought along by a slower stage. Pot grown plants that were given close attention the preceding summer to enable them to make flowering wood, give best results, especially as large specimens. Those that up to this time have had a period of rest, laid down outside to harden and ripen up the wood, can now be brought in and given a thorough overhauling by cutting out the dead wood, attending to the staking, or shaping according to the form desired. Rambler roses do not require any pruning at this time beyond cutting out the dead and spindly wood, and topping back the lateral shoots so that they can be trained to the required shape. Examine the drainage, cutting off any roots that have pushed through the bottom of the pots to clog up the holes. Remove about an inch of the surface soil to allow for a top dressing of bone-meal and a mulch of one part each of fresh soil and well rotted manure. After this has been attended to, place the plants in a light house and give them a good watering at the roots so that the root ball is wet through. They will not need watering again for several days, but to keep the wood plump and prevent it shrivelling, syringing should be given every day or two until the growths begin to shoot out. After the plants get into leaf, the syringing must be governed according to the weather conditions. Start up the plants in a temperature of about 50 degrees, gradually increasing it as growth proceeds until the night temperature reaches the 60 degree mark. These plants will stand a high temperature during bright days, providing a degree of moisture is maintained to keep down the red spider, which attacks them quickly under dry conditions. Rambler roses require a liberal amount of water when in active growth and must not suffer for want of it at any time. They are also greatly benefited by watering with liquid cow-manure about twice a week.

Hydrangeas.

The hydrangea has always been one of the most important of the pot plants for Easter and spring sales, and with the shortage of the imported stock, these plants will be more valuable than ever this year. The coming of the new French varieties also raised these plants considerably in popular favor. The plants being prepared the preceding season for the following spring sale as blooming plants, they should be classed in two groups. In the first we will put those that have been pot grown and are more suitable for early flowering, and in the other group, we will place the field-grown plants, lifted and potted in September or October. These are not so sure for early-forcing, being better suited for late spring and Memorial day.

Hydrangeas respond to a generous treatment, but they suffer and the foliage turns yellow from stagnant soil and overwatering quicker than most plants. Make sure that each plant is provided with ample drainage. When in active growth, they require to be watered liberally, and at no time should they be allowed to wilt for the want of it, but the clogging up of the drainage so that the water cannot pass freely away is disastrous to the plants. They thrive in a compost of one part well-rotted cow manure to two parts fresh soil, adding to this a sprinkling of bonemeal, sharp sand and limestone. As soon after January 1 as they can be handled, overhaul the pot-grown plants and start them into growth slowly in a night temperature of 45-50 degrees, with a raise of 10 degrees during the day time. Select the plants according to their size, trim out the dead or unnecessary weak wood and repot into fresh pots according to the size of the plants. Do not disturb the ball of the plant or overpot. Some of the larger sizes that were repotted last summer need only to be mulched at this time. The late summer propagated stock, now well rooted in 3-inch pots, can be grown into fine plants with one or two large heads of bloom for Easter, being very popular and sell well. The beauty of these plants is to keep them dwarf and preserve their foliage. To do this, they require ample room and full exposure to the light. The field grown plants that were potted last September will not need another potting at this time unless they were potted in small sizes with the intention of repotting as they started into active growth. These plants should also be cleaned up and brought into full light, starting them up in a low temperature, gradually increasing it as the plants take on growth until they are well clothed with foliage, when a steady temperature of 58 degrees at night, with a raise of 10 degrees with careful ventilation during the daytime, should be maintained.

Greenfly infest hydrangeas, working down into the buds, and unless the plants are kept clean by regular fumigating, a number of the buds will be crippled, resulting in small, undersized heads of bloom. They will need watching to keep the insects in check from the time they are started into growth until the flower heads begin to show color. Then, if the plants have been kept clean by regular fumigations, they will remain so until past their usefulness.

Polyantha or Baby Rambler Roses.

A large number of this type of rose have been grown for Easter and Memorial day by the plantmen for several years, but they have not been given the place to which they are entitled. Most of the growers have depended on the imported budded stock of formal shape instead of growing them on their own roots in a natural and much more beautiful form. They bloom freely at every growth shoot, and by careful culture can be grown into fine specimens with a mass of bloom. There are a number of varieties that are very beautiful, but to select but one we would take the variety, Orleans. We have grown this one for spring sales since it was introduced into this country, and we find it easy to grow as well as being a great seller. Young plants of this type of rose, now from 3-inch pots, can be grown into fine salable plants for Easter. Treat them as you would the young stock of forcing roses for next year's planting, only give them more space between each plant and feed liberally with liquid cow manure.

Ivy Geraniums and Other Plants.

Plantmen who obtained their early training in European countries remember the fine trained specimens of Ivy geraniums that were met with in private conservatories and at the plant markets. It might be well to try a few of these as a novelty. They are grown largely in California and the southern states, but are rarely seen as specimen pot plants of Ivy geranium in the large cities of the eastern and middle western states.

Now that we have varieties of pelargoniums on the order of Easter Greeting, this class of plant is being grown in larger numbers for Easter sales. We meet them as good size plants down to very small, cheap stock. They are easy to grow and help out greatly. They need to be closely watched for the appearance of greenfly, which infest these plants about as much as they do any plant in cultivation.

Large specimens of marguerites, both white and yellow, are grown for Easter in some of the large cities. They need to be well rooted to bloom freely and absorb large quantities of liquid manure. It is the large specimens of these plants that make the show and create the demand for them for decorative purposes. There is not much call for smaller sized plants.

There are a number of plants that might be classed as miscellaneous which can be grown into good sellers for Easter. Among them are some of the flowering begonias—on the order of rubra and Pres. Carnot. The hardy primroses, which are becoming so popular in Boston, also there are some of the hardy plants like the Canterbury bells, which can be flowered easily in pots, if grown cool, and last, but not least, we have the primulas, obconica and malacoides, and we must not forget the long list of hyacinths, tulips and narcissi.

Geraniums.

We are given to think of the geranium principally as a bedding plant, yet with careful culture it can be made one of the best decorative plants for retail sales. Plants from 2½-inch pots, repotted now into 4's, then as soon as rooted, February 1-15, into six-inch, then soon after March 1, into 7 or 8-inch, can be grown into fine specimens for Easter sales. The principal point to consider in the culture of these plants is to grow them quick without any check to enable them to produce the fine, large foliage and heavy trusses of bloom. Any check in their growth, so that the wood becomes hard, takes away a great deal of their beauty. They need the closest attention as regards watering and make the best growth when held a little to the dry side. They also require space enough for the air to circulate freely between each plant. After the plants get to be a good size, it is a good plan to raise the larger ones on pots through the center of the bench. When they have become well rooted, an occasional watering with liquid manure will add fine color to the blooms and foliage. Give them a temperature of 54-56 degrees at night with a raise of 4-6 degrees during the day. Select the semi-double varieties with the large trusses of bloom like Beaute Poitevine and Alphonse Ricard. They are best suited for this purpose and make the best showing.

Lilies for Easter.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:

Easter falling on April 20 this year, please advise when cold storage giganteum lily bulbs should be started to be in on time, temperature required and general treatment necessary.

GROWER.

Cold storage bulbs of Lilium giganteum for Easter bloom must be planted this month, as they need from 10 to 12 weeks for development. A temperature of 55 to 60 degrees is necessary, and the bulbs may be grown in pots or benches.

The illustrations herewith show good examples of cold storage giganteum lilies grown for Christmas. That at the establishment of Wm. K. Harris, Philadelphia, Pa., is of a batch of 5,000 bulbs, 7-9 cold storage giganteums, planted on September 1 in a center bench, 8x90 feet. They were placed four inches apart in the rows and five inches between. The bed received a good soaking when planted, was then covered with straw to prevent drying out, and was not watered again for six weeks. The temperature was kept as low as possible for the season with ventilators open at night. Since heat was necessary, the night temperature was held at 55°. When the shoots were well above the soil the straw was removed and water given sparingly. The growth was gradual and sturdy, the stems well covered with foliage, strong and erect, carrying their quota of buds, which ranged from two to five, some even carrying six. The percentage of those that did not grow, came blind, or set only one bud was very small. The whole bed was wonderfully even.

John Prince, grower and superintendent for Mr. Harris, attributes his success to getting a good root growth before the shoots began to draw on the bulbs' vitality. They had not at any time been hurried or forced. The first buds or flowers were cut December 5. The photograph was taken December 10. The entire bed was cut off before or for Christmas delivery. Mr. Prince believes that bulbs from cold storage can be brought in for Easter. He would start early in January, pot in sandy compost to get good drainage, set up on a table at once, keep cool to get root action, and no water after the first soaking for six weeks, covering the pots with straw to prevent drying out. After the plants are well up, then a gradual raising of the temperature should be made, the plants being kept going until buds are fairly well developed, after which they can be manipulated in the usual manner, depending on weather conditions to make the week of the holiday.

Manager Wm. Ross, of the Floracraft Gardens, Moorestown, N. J., an extensive grower of lilies for the Philadelphia market, had a splendid crop of giganteums, 9-10 bulbs, that were in December 15. These were planted September 15 and held to a night temperature of 60°. The plants bore from three to six flowers with very few misses. Mr. Ross thinks a handful of good cow manure that is placed in the bottom of each pot, adds considerable to the vigor of the plants and size of the flowers. He is also careful to see that they are sprayed once a week with nicotine. Many plants are ruined with green fly through neglect of this treatment, particularly when the buds are forming. The growth is stunted, buds come defective or not at all, and the blame is generally placed to defective bulbs. It is best to be on the safe side and use an insecticide as a preventive, whether the fly is seen or not, as generally when it is thick enough to see, the damage has been done.

Mr. Ross is going to try cold storage giganteums for Easter. His plan is to plant these, some in boxes and others in pots, using 7-9 bulbs. His method of culture is the same as when forcing earlier in the season. The freshly potted stock is placed on the floor under the benches along the walks in a low house, as they seem to do best or draw up better, where there is less head room. The night temperature is 60°, uniform all the time. This Easter batch will be potted from 10 to 12 weeks before the holiday, depending on the weather. He will not check them in any way until the buds are well along, when if ahead of time, it will be safe to reduce the temperature and retard the growth to hold them.

Ernst Zeiger, a Philadelphia grower, who has forced cold storage giganteums with success, has best results by keeping a temperature of 55° to 60°, or even a little higher, from the start. He finds that a cold, wet soil tends to weaken their vitality, causing the bulbs to rot. If by forcing, the bulbs can be made to send up their shoots, they will make roots later, he says. In a lot of bulbs, planted out to be brought in for Christmas and early January, in a small house with a center ventilator, one end of the bed in the warmest part of the house, had a strong growth, the plants setting buds, while in that part subject to the ventilator, there was a marked decrease in the size of the plants, which proved to him that the high temperature was the vital factor in forcing cold storage lilies. In growing cold storage giganteums for Easter, he advises to first select good firm bulbs, 7-9 or larger. These are to be potted or benched in good, sandy compost so as to insure perfect drainage. When planted, they get a good soaking and then no more water until the roots are there to take it up. They should be at once given a temperature of 60° to 65°, which is to be kept up until all the bulbs that are going to start are well above the soil with shoots from two to four inches in height. This is the critical period, as the bulbs that fail to start at once will not come on later. The temperature is then gradually reduced to 50°, which hardens the growth and prepares the plant to stand the lower, or what might be called the storage period of three to five degrees less, in which the plants are kept until it is time to force them for the market, when the ordinary growing conditions for such stock will prevail.

Mr. Zeiger's theory that cold storage bulbs will continue to grow after the shoots appear without much or any apparent root action, but which he says will be sure to follow later, is borne out by experiences of Alfred M. Campbell, Strafford, Pa., who forces lilies in quantity. He found that bulbs started and with quite a growth, when taken from the boxes, when potted up, gave a very good account of themselves, producing a robust growth which averaged up well in production of flowers, while often dormant but promising looking bulbs, failed to start.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

Now is the time of new resolutions, to take a retrospect of the past year, to measure out its successes and disappointments, and profiting by the knowledge gained, lay out the work of the new year. One thing certain, the business must not stand still; plan that every month shall show an increase over that of a year ago. It can be done if each period is taken up, its work and possibilities studied out and planned for in advance.

Lilies For Christmas.

Here is where the "year book," with its record of all important events, is invaluable. There should be a special feature for almost every week in the year. This will require considerable thought and working up, so as to be timely and seasonable. The wants of customers should be anticipated and frequent suggestions made that will bring to mind that this is the season when, for instance, the primula is just coming into full flower and will be at its best for the next two months, mentioning the several varieties and particularly the malacoides type, which is to be backed up by a special display of plants in the various sizes.

When the first of the forced spring bulbs, daffodils, tulips, etc., are in, they are to be featured in a similar manner, as is also the freesia, which in both plants and cut flowers is a great favorite. In this manner, week after week, the whole season's business can be outlined and anticipated, and preparations made to make the most of each opportunity as it comes along.

Pansies are now to be had in quantity and are always a welcome addition to the box of loose flowers. Pretty little baskets of cut pansies, arranged so that the stems are in damp moss, are always attractive. Many sales are induced by these "ready to carry away" arrangements to customers who would not think of having them made up. Primula malacoides, with its wealth of miniature blossoms, is very pretty, but much more attractive when planted in a small basket with a ribbon decked handle. A window full of these is a great attraction. If priced conspicuously, there will be many sales. Each featured window stock should have appropriate cards. "For that Empty Jardiniere," on a palm or dracena, will call to mind the waiting jar at home. "For the Library Table" can be used for a medium-sized bird's nest fern, in a suitable jar. "These Bloom All Winter" will feature a group of cyclamens. "For the Corsage" will help the sale of sample corsage bunches, which, in boxes ready to go out, are always a noticeable window feature. "The First of the Season" is suitable for any flower just in. These little display cards should be plain but neat and easily read. They are best done by the professional card painter. They are not expensive, and induce sales far in excess of their cost. Examples of this work are to be seen in many of the best shop windows in other lines. They attract attention to goods that otherwise might pass unnoticed. People will often stop to look in the window, whose eyes are first attracted by the signs. The weekly sign or window show card service is now a business that has attained quite an importance. These finished cards are, however, not so exclusive or appropriate as those written to the order of the craft themselves.

Feature the work of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery. The orders that originate in your own store are the ones that pay, as they induce trade that means new customers. Thousands of dollars' worth of this out-of-town business could be worked up by florists in all the large cities if they kept this feature constantly to the front, as but very few know that such rapid delivery to all parts of the country is possible.

Orchid sweet peas will soon be at their best. When fresh, they are delightfully fragrant and leave little to be desired. They are especially dainty for the luncheon table, and unexcelled as a corsage flower.

Getting the Discount.

The money made and saved by taking advantage of all discounts for prompt payments, will, during the course of a year, amount to a very tidy sum. The road to business success is paved with discounts; the man who promptly meets his bills, not only gains the money advantage, but establishes for himself a name that insures that most valuable of all assets—credit. His rating with the business agencies stands high. The report, "discounts all bills," places him at once in the list of the gilt-edged and most desirable customers. The greatest advantage, however, is gained in the market that is always open to those who pay promptly, or who are in a position to make spot cash settlements.

It may be desirable, for one reason or another to push or move a commodity, or it may be that there is a sudden call for funds. To meet the emergency, stock must be turned into cash, even at a sacrifice. The spot cash man, or whose paper is good at the bank, gets the bargain, and is thereby able to undersell or handle the stock at the regular prices, at much greater profit than his less provident competitors.

LILIES FOR CHRISTMAS.

The man careless in business is rarely successful. Such declarations as, "I do not care what my rating is; people do not have to tell me if they do not want to. I can get everything I want," is far too common. When credit men ask for a statement, they are given scant consideration, and little, if any, satisfactory information. This position and state of mind is dangerous; it is not business-like, and eventually leads to disaster.

All resources, such as charged accounts, should be collected as quickly as possible. Business practice is rapidly shortening the time of payment, being in many cases, such as public utilities of all kinds, food products, etc., down to a spot cash basis. Bills should be sent out religiously the first of every month. In cases of charges to customers not having regular accounts, bills should immediately follow purchases. Accounts over two months old should be followed up week by week. The goods were satisfactory and should be paid for promptly. With this money in bank, instead of on the books, the two, three and sometimes larger percentage in discounts to be deducted each month from bills promptly paid, will soon become a welcome source of revenue, which, in addition to good credit, insuring greater power and lower prices in buying, will be found of inestimable advantage.

Some men carry on their business for years with nearly all payments, large or small, made on account. Their condition is not bad, but they get into this careless way and do not seem to realize the benefits of the receipt in full. Why not collect up closer, get the resources together, and clear up, if not all, one bill at a time, and then watch out for and take advantage of all discounts?

Modernizing the Store.

In many cut flower stores in the city's business districts and in others near the outskirts where the store and greenhouses are combined, there is still an old-fashioned way of doing things, in much the same manner as has prevailed for years. It is difficult to get some men to adopt new methods; they are in a rut and do not seem to want to get out of it. Every time Mrs. Smith sends a funeral piece, the regulation $5 wreath is made up to look as much like the last one as possible. Nothing else is proposed because they know (?) she would not take it. Mrs. Blank's Christmas order is a duplicate of that sent last year in almost every particular. Things are done in a staid, quiet way, efficiently and correct. New methods, novelties, a change of the store front, interior, etc., however, never occurs to the proprietor.

At times new blood is infused, additional energy produced by reason of the younger generation, which has grown up, taking a hand. The old horse and wagon must give way to a car. There is a protest—it is too great an expense, but the boys win out, and in a short time the wonder is how they got along for such a time without it. New stock is seen on the shelves, improvements are made that change the interior of the store which are, when finished, found to economize room and otherwise make for the betterment of the business. The window which had always received some attention, but was never anything more than just a neat arrangement of vases of flowers or plants, begins to have a punch to it. There is now some artistic merit; something different from before and people stop to have a look, and incidentally receive a good business impression, which is further renewed the next time they pass, by another arrangement better than the first. The new blood is working. Their enthusiasm is growing; they are thinking about the work and wondering what they shall do next.

Once get a man enthused over his work and it is difficult to hold him back. He is continually putting his best foot forward, trying out new things, reaching for more and better trade. Nothing gets a man going like success in his undertaking. His heart goes into the work, which is never too hard, so long as the business keeps coming.

To obtain an ever-increasing trade one has to keep his best foot forward, to at all times give the best he has. The retail store that intends to progress, must put all lethargic manners and methods behind it. Out the back door and down the dump with them. What is required is new, up-to-date goods displayed in a different way. The old counters and the antique show cases must give way to tables artistically arranged about the store, on which the latest cut flower holders and choice pieces of pottery are placed attractively. Vases of flowers are placed in ribboned baskets from which they are sold to better advantage. Choice plants in jardinières add to the attractiveness, while rugs here and there give a finish to the floor that cannot be obtained without them.

These changes cannot be made in a day. They are an evolution which may be more or less rapid, but should be always forward, one advance suggested by the other, the best foot to the front all the time.

Express Rates Increased.

By authority of the director general of railroads, an increase in express rates on lines under government control, mention of which was made in our issue of December 7, page 926, became effective January 1, 1919.

In Zone 1, described broadly as the territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers, first class rates between all blocks are increased three scale numbers. For example: The rate from New York (Block 952) to Chicago (Block 835) is Scale No. 38, or $2.64 per 100 pounds for first class and $1.98 per 100 pounds for second class shipments. The new tariff increases the rate to Scale No. 41, or $2.80 per 100 pounds for first class and $2.11 per 100 for second class. First and second class rates between points in Zone 1 and points in all other zones are also increased three scale numbers.

Between points outside of Zone 1, comprising the territory south of the Ohio and Potomac and west of the Mississippi rivers, all first and second class rates between blocks in such territory are increased two scale numbers.

Effective January 1, 1919, rates between points in the United States and points in Canada and Newfoundland, are increased 15 cents per 100 pounds for first-class and 10 cents per 100 pounds for second-class matter. On traffic moving from Canada or Newfoundland to the United States, these increases become effective January 25, 1919.

Effective in Zone 1, on shipments in Class 1, which includes cut flowers, the increase averages between 16 and 17 cents per 100 pounds. In Class 2, which embraces seeds, bulbs, trees and shrubs, etc., the increase is about 13 cents. In other zones, the first class rate increases from 10 to 12 cents, second class in proportion.

National Publicity for Flowers.

The publicity committees have been able to extend their plans as previously announced, so that the January and February magazine advertisements are now to appear in 33 national magazines, instead of 27, as previously arranged. The additions are Pictorial Review, McClure's, System, Christian Herald and Judge. Altogether, our list will provide a circulation of 12,000,000 for some of the advertisements, and only a trifle less for others.

In all these advertisements our slogan, "Say it with Flowers," is paramount. Our promotion bureau has had ample demonstration of the efficacy of this slogan through the numerous requests received for its service in individual transactions, from Palestine, South Africa, France, Great Britain, Cuba, Brazil and other countries, the correspondents, without knowledge of us other than obtained through our advertising, sending their money with their requests, thus evidencing their pleasure in being able through us to make flowers their messengers in the transmission of sentiments from points most remote.

What such business has amounted to here at home, we are, of course, unable to state, although many contributors to our fund who have been on the lookout for evidence of results from the campaign work, advise us of their complete satisfaction with results as brought to their knowledge, and checks for their 1919 subscriptions are coming in, accompanied by hearty endorsements of our plan of campaign.

Our promotion bureau has just completed the mailing of many thousands of pamphlets describing its direct service aids to those who, through their local advertising, desire to connect their establishments with the national magazine advertising. Any florist who has not received a pamphlet should write at once to the secretary for one.

We have now entered upon the second year of the campaign, and are starting under conditions which are much more favorable than those we had to contend with last year. Practically, the day for the suspension of any "non-essential" has passed, and flowers need no longer be tabbed with a bugaboo term. The public has accepted our slogan, "Say it with Flowers," as forcefully suggestive, and it is up to us to make it a thousand times more impressive, that our products may be always in mind, and their peculiar fitness as mediums for the conveyance of sentiment readily recognized as occasions may arise.

To attain this, money is needed, and the money must be provided by the florists themselves. It is estimated that there are between 15,000 and 20,000 florists in the country, yet last year we were able to collect a fund of less than $50,000. It may have been because our project was more or less experimental. This year there is no experiment about our work. We know what we are doing, and the amount of good we may expect. To every florist who has his business at heart, but who has not booked himself for a subscription to the 1919 campaign, we are putting the question, "Are you with us? If not, why?"

Forced Shrubbery.

Pussy willow sprays were first forced during the early winter as an experiment. It was not thought there would be much sale for them, as they were said by some to be so out of season that people would not take to them. They soon made a market for themselves and are now a standard item of stock from the middle of November on.

Growers are now giving the culture of these sprays considerable attention, pruning during the summer so as to get growths of varying lengths, there being a good demand for small perfect sprays of from 12 to 18 inches in length. There is quality in these as in all market stock, the manured, cultivated and watered trees producing shoots carrying more and better developed buds than the trees that have had no especial care. A pussy willow grove that is well cared for will return as much, or perhaps more, per square foot as any other outdoor crop. There is little, if any, loss in the stock when cut as the tufted shoots will generally last in good condition until sold.

The forsythia is a shrub, the branches of which force easily from the middle of January on. They are best pruned so as to produce strong single shoots which set buds closely together from the bottom to the tip end of the branch. These force easily, the buds opening evenly the entire length. These single stems are easier handled and more decorative than the twiggy stock generally seen.

Double flowering almonds and much of the other spring shrubbery, are readily forced and should be in good demand this season during the late winter.

Fruit tree blossoms, crab apple, large apple, and double cherry blossoms, can be forced into flower from the dormant cut branches with very good success. On many farms, there are quite large lilac bushes that can be bought for little money, that if lifted and stored in a cold house or shed can be easily forced through February and March and produce very good crops of flowers. They can be grown in low houses, heeled in on their sides and started in a night temperature of not less than 60° and started in the bright sunlight with frequent syringings. When the flower buds are still green and about one-third size, the house is covered with mats or canvas and made dark when the sprays finish of good texture and pure white. If started, and forced continuously in the dark, the heads are weak and spindly and not nearly as salable.

Tariff on Tree with Semi-Precious Stones.

In a decision just handed down, sustaining a protest of S. Ma, of New York, the board of United States general appraisers holds that a diminutive olive tree in blossom, set into a small pot, with plants and rocks at its base, the tree with pot standing about 16 inches high, and the entirety being composed in chief value of semi-precious stones, is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 98, Tariff Act of 1913, for "all articles composed wholly or in chief value of agate, rock crystal, or other semi-precious stones," rather than under paragraph 347 as "artificial and ornamental fruits, grains, leaves, flowers and stems or parts thereof, of whatever material composed."

HOLIDAY TRADE.

Complete Cleanup at Advanced Prices.

As stated in our last week's issue, page 1116, a limited supply of stock and prices much in advance of those of previous years, characterized the holiday demand of 1918, the volume of business which showed a gain of probably 35 per cent over that of last year, being held to that figure by the shortage of flowers in which there was in practically every instance a quick cleanup. The quality of the offerings, both in cut stock and plants, was equal to, if not better, on the average, than that last year, the latter enjoying an unusually good call, especially after the supply of flowers was depleted. In a few instances, where the higher prices asked were looked upon as excessive by the buying public, complaints were heard, but as a rule, and among purchasers in the more prosperous walks of life, orders were as liberal as in other years. In some sections, however, the fear is expressed that the increase will have a detrimental effect on future business, rather than educating the occasional flower buyer to the fact that the florists' product is not a luxury. The following condensed reports indicate how the trade fared in a number of the leading cities of the country:

TELEIR HAUTE, IND.—With roses at $3.50 per dozen, carnations priced at $3 and violets $2.50 per bunch, an advance of 100 per cent over the Christmas period of last year, N. B. & C. E. Dover state that business showed an increase of 33 1-3 per cent in volume, compared with 1917. In carnations, roses and violets, the supply was plentiful; in fact, the market presented a crowded appearance on Christmas day, with much of the stock received from the outside presenting a pickled appearance. There was an increased call for plants, especially poinsettias and cyclamens. There was a marked decrease in the number of sales, this firm being unable to serve fully 300 prospective purchasers who would not pay the high prices.

DES MOINES, IA.—According to the J. S. Wilson Floral Co., 1918 Christmas business exceeded that of a year ago by about 15 per cent with an extra heavy call for plants, especially cyclamens and poinsettias, the leaders, followed by peppers, spireas, begonias and narcissi. Combination plant baskets also sold well. Prices, nothing less than $2, were better than last year. Cut flower sales were not as large as expected, the principal call being for red and pink roses, with only a limited demand for carnations, violets, narcissi and poinsettias. High prices and limited supply kept many buyers away. Everything considered, however, the business was most satisfactory.

FARGO, N. D.—An advance in prices of from 25 to 35 per cent, as compared with the result that the volume of duction in the number of buyers this year, but those who purchased seemed willing to pay the price for good stock, according to the Smedley Floral Co., with the figures of 1917, caused a re-Christmas trade was about one-third better than a year ago. As a rule, the quality was none too good, and wholesale prices high, but these conditions were offset by a limited supply of cut stock. High prices on this line resulted in an increased demand for plants. Cut poinsettias sold remarkably well. Inferior stock in all classes was draggy in the general movement. Made up

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—With prices from 50 to 100 per cent higher than in 1917, this year's Christmas sales about held the average, although a better showing would have been made, had cut flowers, especially carnations, been in more liberal supply. Bulbous stock was also out of the running, as shown by the report of D. E. Law. The quality was about on a par with that of former years. Price seemed to be no object, and everything in sight, including plants, cleaned up in short order. With an adequate supply, the volume of sales would have been double. Holly and greens were scarce at prices higher than usual.

FREDERICTON, N. B.—According to J. Bebbington & Son the Christmas sales increase was limited to about 25 per cent, compared with 1917, due to a limited supply of stock, while prices recorded an advance of from one-fourth to one-half. In roses, carnations and violets, hundreds more could have been sold had they been available. In plants, the leaders were cyclamens, cherries, and primroses. Holly wreaths sold at $1.50 each and there was a good call for ferns in pans at $1.50 and $2. Red geraniums proved good property and went fast at $1 and $1.50.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—With Christmas prices 50 per cent advanced, inclement weather and a street car strike to be taken into consideration, Samuel Murray says sales were more than one-third better than in 1917. The supply of carnations, violets and roses was equal to all requirements and the quality equalled that of last year. Bulbous flowers were missing. The call for flowering plants was better than in former years. The Florists' Telegraph Delivery business, both incoming and outgoing, was double that recorded last year.

SPOKANE, WASH.—With the shortest supply of cut flowers ever experienced in this city at Christmas, higher prices brought an increase of 10 per cent in the volume of business compared with 1917, according to Hoyt Bros. These conditions resulted in an increased demand for pot plants. The influenza epidemic in this city has been so severe that the old-fashioned Christmas spirit was not so much in evidence as in former years and there were few Christmas festivities. Those who bought, simply took what they could get.

EAST AURORA, N. Y.—Prices for Christmas offerings advanced 50 per cent compared with 1917, the volume of sales showing an increase of about one-fourth, compared with last year's figures. Roses, carnations and violets were on hand in ample supply and of better quality than usual. Purchasers seemed willing to pay to get what they wanted. Pot plants showed an increased demand. There was little call for artificial stock, according to a summary of holiday conditions by Fred W. Wise.

DALLAS, TEX.—With prices at least 50 per cent higher than last year, and in some instances advanced 100 per cent, the Lang Floral & Nursery Co. reports business for the 1918 Christmas season highly satisfactory. Buyers seemed well supplied with money and prices were not questioned, provided quality was present. The cut flower supply was ample, among the offerings being Paper Whites and a few Golden Glow. Plant sales were featured.

PORTLAND, ME.—Exorbitant prices and quality inferior in every way, including weak stems, held sales for the Christmas holiday this year to a point below that of 1917. Had prices been within reason, according to Miss Bertha Lougee, business would have been above complaint. Flowering plants profited by the situation, and showed an increase in popularity, especially in the inexpensive offerings. Wreaths also were among the quick sellers.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Prices for Christmas in this city showed an increase varying from 50 to 100 per cent, with a scarcity of supply, especially in carnations, and quality inferior to that of a year ago, according to Paul E. Lange. The volume of business, however, was only 15 per cent better than in 1917. In the plant section, the greatest demand was for cyclamens in 6-inch pots. Baskets of ruscus and immortelles also found favor with some purchasers.

BRAMPTON, ONT.—W. G. Peacock, of the Dale estate, in discussing the 1918 Christmas trade, states there was considerable increase in volume of sales over last year, prices showing an advance of about 25 per cent. The supply was not large enough to meet all requirements, but the quality in general was above the average. A few narcissi were among the offerings and there was a large call for orchids and Russell roses.

HAVERTHILL, MASS.—According to W. F. Abrams, high prices, which were nearly double those of last year, boosted Christmas sales about 25 per cent, compared with 1917. With a limited cut flower supply of usual quality, and no bulbous stock, there was no trouble in making sales. In plants, begonias moved best. The coal shortage here curtailed the usual supply for the holidays considerably.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—With the exception of bulbous flowers, cut stock for Christmas was in good supply, and while prices ruled higher than in former years, the volume of sales held to about the same figures as in 1917. Pot plant sales showed an increase as purchasers refused to pay the exorbitant prices asked for cut flowers. Some retailers refused to handle them.

MOBILE, ALA.—In money value, 1918 Christmas trade showed a gain of 25 per cent over that of last year, prices showing a proportionate increase with a limited supply of stock of average quality, is the report of the Minge Floral Co. The plant sales were about on a par with the corresponding period of 1917. There were few complaints regarding prices.

TAMPA, FLA.—Christmas business in this city, as reported by the Tampa Floral Co., was slightly better than that of 1917, with a corresponding increase in prices. The quality of the stock offered was fairly satisfactory, and the limited offerings in violets, roses and carnations cleaned up rapidly. Plants of all kinds sold better than in former years.

MADISON, WIS.—According to the Rentschler Floral Co., a smaller number of sales as compared with the 1917 Christmas records, showed an increase in the volume of this year's business. Retail prices were about on a par with former years, but the profit was less. The quality of the offerings was very poor and resulted in a strong demand for plants.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—There was a good Christmas demand with plenty of stock in roses and carnations, according to George Collins of Henry Smith's. Business has been very good for some time, with a heavy call for funeral work and cut flower prices high.

SANTA CRUZ, CALIF.—With the prevailing epidemic of influenza, everything in the way of flowers was used for funeral designs and nearly all Christmas orders had to be turned down, according to W. E. King.

COLUMBUS, O.—The best Christmas demand in the history of the trade in this city with prices higher than usual is reported by John R. Hellenenthal. Violets were in plentiful supply but roses and carnations were limited due to the heavy demand before the holiday for funeral orders. In bulbous stock, Paper Whites cleaned up well at $2 per dozen. All kinds of flowering plants moved fast and the call for made up baskets was never better. Poinsettias, both cut and in pans, commanded good figures. Primroses were also very popular as were begonias, cyclamens, etc., in baskets. The weather was all that could be desired, purchasers seemed to have plenty of money and the flower stores were crowded.

WICHITA, KAN.—With prices one-fourth higher than last year, the 1918 Christmas sales showed an increase of about 12½ per cent. The home-grown carnations and extra fine roses were cut too close, making these items among the limited offerings, but receipts of cut stock at the eleventh hour made the supply greater than the demand. There was a heavy call for flowering plants. Trade would have been much better but for a blizzard which raged all day Monday and Tuesday, followed by zero weather Christmas day, delaying cutting and all shipments out of the city. Express companies returned many packages of cut flowers and plants, being unable to forward same. Local deliveries were almost impossible.

LONDON, ONT.—A report from J. Gamage & Sons shows Christmas sales this year exceeded those of 1917 by about 90 per cent, prices being from 35 to 100 per cent higher than a year ago. Carnations were in short supply, but roses and violets were plentiful and the quality was the finest ever seen here. There was also an exceptionally fine line of chrysanthemums that were readily taken at from $7.50 to $9 per dozen. Baskets and madeup arrangements proved themselves to be increasing in favor. Money was plentiful, people were spending it and everything in the way of cut flowers and plants found ready buyers.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.—The report of the Arizona Seed & Floral Co. shows that Christmas prices in this city were 100 per cent higher than in 1917, while sales, due to diligent advertising, increased fourfold. Roses, carnations and violets were in short supply and the same was true of bulbous flowers. The quality of the stock was as good, if not better, than last year. Both flowering and decorative plants sold better than in former years. Inquiries were received much earlier than usual this year, and many orders had been booked by December 15.

PORTLAND, ORE.—With selling prices advanced from 20 to 50 per cent and the volume of business showing an increase of 25 per cent, the available supply was just about equal to the demand, according to Clark Bros. Freesias were the only offerings in bulbous flowers, but they sold readily. Quality in general was all that could be expected. Plant sales were probably the largest in the history of the trade in this city. Several growers had fine cuts of chrysanthemums which retailed at $9 per dozen.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—With prices from one-third to one-half higher than last year, the 1918 Christmas demand was a trifle above the average in this city, according to A. Washburn & Sons. The supply of roses, carnations and violets was not equal to requirements and no bulbous flowers were offered. The quality of carnations showed an improvement over last year. Roses were about the same. In the plant demand, there was little change in volume, but cemetery wreaths sold exceptionally well.

PEORIA, ILL.—According to B. Juergens, there was a shortage in every item of the cut flower supply, with prices higher than in 1917 and the volume of the Christmas trade from 25 to 35 per cent greater than a year ago. In quality the stock compared favorably with that of last season, if anything, a little better. Everything cleaned up quickly and there was an especially good call for flowering plants. A heavy snow on December 24 made delivery rather difficult, but there was no freezing damage.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Henry Smith reports 1918 Christmas trade larger than last year by at least 10 per cent, with a price increase varying from 25 to 50 per cent. Roses, carnations and violets were in plentiful supply, the quality was good, and the stock cleaned up each day. In bulbous stock, freesias were the only offering, but they sold well. Cut poinsettias were the slow item. Flowering plants enjoyed a greater call than a year ago and brought better returns.

CANAL, DOVER, O.—C. Betscher, in summing up the 1918 Christmas demand states, there was a liberal increase in volume of business, with prices higher than last year, and the stock, rather limited in some lines, of very good quality. Everything in the way of a flower was in demand and plants sold better than in former years. Customers seemed to have the money and there was no complaint as to prices. The call seems to be increasing for better quality.

CLEVELAND, O.—With retail prices 30 to 50 per cent better than last year, the 1918 Christmas sales showed an increase of 50 per cent over last year, according to the J. M. Gasser Co. While the supply of roses, carnations and violets was short, and practically no bulbous flowers were offered, the quality was superior to that of last year, and prices were paid without question. Plants moved about the same as in previous years.

OTTAWA, ONT.—With flowers bringing much higher prices, and the supply limited, especially in carnations, Scrim, Florist, states business in general was about 25 per cent better than for the Christmas period of 1917. There was a great call for flowering plants, cyclamens holding the lead, followed by begonias, the Boston fern being a good third. Basket and pot and pan arrangements sold better than in former years.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—With a shortage of cut flowers and no increased demand for plants, the principal call being for funeral work due to the influenza epidemic, Christmas sales increased one-third over those of 1917, with prices about 25 per cent higher, according to Wm. Schlatter & Son. The quality of stock was better than usual and there was no noticeable increase in demand for any particular flower.

BRISTOL, TENN.—Christmas prices in this city were much better than in former years, but customers seemed willing to pay the increase, according to the Fairmont Gardens, with the result that the volume of business recorded showed an increase of 25 per cent. The quality of the stock offered was better than usual, but the supply of cut flowers was short. Flowering plant sales showed an increase.

ATLANTIC, IA.—With a limited supply of cut flowers of better quality than in previous years, the volume of Christmas business here showed an increase of 40 per cent, at better prices than received in 1917, say the Atlantic Greenhouses. Flowering plants showed an increase in popularity and fancy basket arrangements sold well. Everything in wreaths had a good call.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—With prices advanced about 30 per cent over last year's figures, the 1918 Christmas sales in this city, according to G. Bartholme, were about equal in volume to those of 1917. The cut flower supply was limited and there was considerable increase in the sale of pot ferns and araucarias. Red and green ruscus sold well for cemetery decorations.

LAWRENCE, KAN.—According to A. Whitcomb & Son, even with prices double those asked in previous years, the 1918 Christmas sales fell below normal, due to the extreme shortage of cut stock, and that offered showed poor quality. Bulbous flowers were missing. In plants, begonias and cyclamens took the lead. Inclement weather made delivery difficult.

GREELEY, COLO.—With prices showing an increase of about 50 per cent over those of last year, and a limited supply of cut flowers, the 1918 Christmas sales were one-third greater than a year ago, according to the Gardner Floral Co. There was an increased demand for plants and many wreaths were sold for cemetery decoration.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—With prices from 50 to 75 per cent higher than last year 1918 Christmas sales were about one-half larger according to Holm & Olson. The supply of roses, carnations and violets was limited and there were few bulbous flowers on the market. There was an increased demand for flowering plants.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—Christmas business in this city was very brisk, helped considerably by the ideal weather. Flowers of all kinds were scarce and high prices prevailed, as shown by the report of the Salford Flower Shop. Paper Whites were a welcome factor, and orchids and violets were plentiful.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—According to Abele Bros., Christmas trade here showed an increase in volume of about one-fifth as compared with that of last year, prices being 25 per cent higher, and the supply limited, although of high quality. In plants, the call was principally for the flowering varieties.

OBITUARY.

George A. Rackham.

George A. Rackham, retired florist, died at his home in Northville, Mich., December 31, 1918, age 67 years. He was born near Cleveland, O., but the greater part of his life was spent near Mt. Clemens, Mich. About 25 years ago he established himself in business at 880 Van Dyke avenue, Detroit, most of his time being devoted to growing carnations for the wholesale trade. His interest in the culture of this flower led to his election as president of the American Carnation Society in 1903 and he presided at the annual meeting held in Detroit in March, 1904. He also filled the office of president of the florists' club of that city for two terms and was most energetic in the affairs of the organization which prospered under his guidance to a remarkable degree.

About eight years ago, Mr. Rackham sold his establishment to M. Bloy and took a position with the school board which gave him charge of the grounds attached to the various schools in the city. He later retired to the small farm at Northville, where he died, the past two years being spent in resting and resisting as best he could the cause of his death, hardening of the arteries of the heart.

Mr. Rackham was a man of extraordinary energy, physically and mentally, and possessed a good education, keen perception and an indomitable will. He was able to make his personality felt and his rare good judgment was always respected by all who knew him.

The funeral was held January 4 with interment in Woodlawn cemetery, Detroit, being largely attended. The floral offerings were many and beautiful and included a tribute from the Detroit Florists' Club. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Sarah Rackham, his sons, Avery, Harry and Stuart, and a daughter, Helen.

J. F. S.

William H. Amling.

William H. Amling, well-known grower at Maywood, Ill., died at the West Suburban hospital, January 4, at 1 p. m., from anemia, at the age of 52 years. He was born at Maywood, August 3, 1866, in which village he received his early education, and later attended the normal school at Addison, Ill., after which he taught school at Defiance, O., Manitowoc, Wis., and for the greater length of time at Milwaukee. When 40 years of age, he gave up teaching and entered the florist business, having purchased a small place at Maywood, at that time owned by William Collatz, directly opposite the A. F. Amling range. Here he began the growing of carnations, and his efforts were crowned with success from the start. The varieties grown at that time were Genevieve Lord and Boston Market, but as the business prospered, the capacity of the establishment was increased until it now embraces two ranges with 75,000 square feet of glass, and roses, carnations, chrysanthemums, freesias, and, most important of all, sweet peas of exceptional quality were added to the products of the establishment, all of which are readily disposed of in the Chicago wholesale market.

Mr. Amling was always a most enthusiastic member of the Chicago Florists' Club, was elected president of that organization December 7, 1916, and held office during the following year, when his health first began to fail to such an extent that he found it impossible at times to attend the meetings. He was also a member of the Society of American Florists, and was a familiar figure at many of the trade gatherings throughout the country, where he made friends with everyone he met.

Mr. Amling was a brother of E. C. Amling, the well-known Chicago wholesale commission man, and A. F. Amling, the leading grower at Maywood. Another brother, H. G. Amling, is at present in Germany, and four sisters, Mrs. Fred Wehrmann, Mrs. Chas. Belling, Mrs. Mart Drechler and Mrs. Louise Glinther survive him. He leaves a wife and five children, Elsa and Irma, Herbert, Martin, and Walter, to mourn his death, to whom he was always a loving husband and father, and who feel their loss keenly, although for the past year and more his health was failing rapidly, and while under constant care of specialists, no hopes were entertained for his recovery. His son, Walter, who is vice-president of the Chicago Florists' Club, and Herbert and Martin, were actively identified with the growing end of his business, and have been practically in charge since he first became sick.

The funeral was held Tuesday, January 7, from the family residence at Maywood at 1 o'clock, with services at St. Paul's Lutheran church and interment at Oakridge cemetery. It was largely attended by members of all branches of the trade, and the floral offerings from the craft which were unusually numerous and beautiful expressed the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow men. The trade has certainly lost one of its most valued members and extends its heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family in this their hour of deepest sorrow.

James McCollom.

James McCollom, superintendent of parks of Paterson, N. J., for the past 16 years, died at his home in that city, January 2, after an illness of two weeks of a complication of diseases. He was about 67 years old, having been born in Paterson, and had been connected with its park department from the date of its inception, about 30 years ago. Unlike many men who hold positions similar to the one he had held, he did not begin his active career, on leaving school, in horticultural pursuits. After graduating from the Paterson high school, he entered the plant of the old Grant Locomotive Works and learned the trade of a pattern maker, and later took up cab building. He had always been interested in plants and flowers, and in 1888 was appointed caretaker of Westside park. He took up the study of botany and horticultural matters in general, and soon became recognized as a well informed man on the various features of his work. He was thorough and painstaking, and under his management the park area of Paterson was doubled and kept in fine condition. He was a close friend of Edward Sceery, the well-known Paterson florist, who is president of the park commission.

The deceased is survived by a widow and two sons, Samuel McCollom, of Kansas City, Mo., and William C. McCollom, of Islip, L. I., N. Y., and one daughter, Mrs. Thomas McGachie, of Newark, N. J. He is also survived by two brothers, John A. McCollom, of Allentown, Pa., and Samuel McCollom, a silk manufacturer of Paterson.

David Lubin.

David Lubin, founder of the International Institute of Agriculture, died in Rome, Italy, of pneumonia on New Year's Day, according to a cable message received in this country January 2. He was 78 years old. Lubin's knowledge of agriculture, or what some of his critics said was his lack of it, has been widely discussed in this country, even in Congress, but whatever his shortcomings may have been, he deserves credit for originating a good idea and for his tireless industry in seeking support for its development, which was finally crowned with success. He had spent much time in working out a plan for a non-political international institute for the publication of reports at stated intervals, showing the condition of crops in the different countries of the world, and for the compilation of reliable data on the demand and supply of agricultural labor in the various countries, for united defense against diseases of animals and plants, and for a general clearing house of agricultural information. Starting to seek support for his scheme, he met with rebuffs, but persevered until finally, in 1904, he succeeded in interesting the King of Italy. King Emmanuel agreed to call an international congress of agriculture. Forty nations were represented at the congress, and later the number supporting the movement was increased to 53. Lubin's plans were adopted, and the King of Italy gave the institute a building and an annual grant of $60,000. Lubin was made the American delegate and has since spent much time in Rome.

David Lubin was born in Poland of Jewish parents. His father emigrated to England when the son was two years old. His father dying soon after, his mother married again, and with her husband came to the United States, settling in Massachusetts. David worked for a time in a jewelry factory at Attleboro, Mass., but gaining no advancement, he went to Sacramento, Calif., where in time he opened a "one price" clothing store and eventually became wealthy. It has been stated that he first became interested in agriculture through selling overalls to farmers. He owned a fruit farm in California. He is survived by his widow, now in Rome, and four daughters and three sons. One daughter, Mrs. Maurice Saqui, is a resident of New York. Another daughter, Mrs. W. Silenzo, wife of an Italian diplomat, lives in Alexandria, Egypt. The other two girls are in school. The sons are Jesse Lubin, of Sacramento; Simon Lubin, on a government commission in Europe, and Theodore Lubin, a student in England.

At Ex-President Roosevelt's funeral, January 8, the only floral tribute on the casket was a wreath of anemones from the colonel's comrades in the Rough Rider regiment of Spanish-American war days. The many floral tributes in the church included wreaths from President Wilson and Vice-President Marshall.

Packing Charges.

It is rapidly becoming the custom to charge all packing expenses at cost. All articles such as lumber, paper, twine, excelsior, etc., that enter into the boxing of plants for transportation, have increased so in price the past two years, that the free service formerly in vogue became such a burden that growers were compelled to make a charge to cover this expense. The average of cost appears to be 10 per cent of the bill, with a minimum of $1.50 for plants packed in pots.

American Carnation Society.

GREETINGS FOR 1919.

Now that peace has returned, and all manner of activity has taken on new life, let us not forget our obligations to the American Carnation Society. Let us resolve to make this the greatest year in its history. We will begin the year with a peace celebration at the meeting in Cleveland January 29-30. Come, add your presence, and assist in making it worthy of the occasion. The exhibition, too, should be the most interesting in years. Come and enjoy the feast.

CHARLES S. STROUT, Pres.

A. F. J. BAUR, Sec'y.

Ward Requests More Time.

The second meeting of the creditors of Charles Willis Ward will be held in the Chamber of Commerce building, Eureka, Calif., at 10 a. m. January 10. A committee chosen at a meeting of the creditors of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, Inc., and of Charles Willis Ward, reports its estimate of the value of assets over $437,000; liabilities, about $280,000. Apparent excess of assets over liabilities $157,000. Unsecured liabilities of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries amount to $83,000. A 90-day extension is sought.

The notice of the second creditors' meeting reached eastern points too late to arrange for representation.

Halt!

A serious danger menaces every florist, seedsman and nurseryman of the United States in the proposed embargo against the importation of plants, including both greenhouse and nursery stock. The occasion demands the earnest and persistent effort of every man and woman in the trade. The business of every individual in the trade will be enormously curtailed if radical changes are not speedily made in the government regulations. A few far-seeing men are spending their own money and valuable time fighting to retain the rights of the trade by having these restrictions removed, but they need the support and co-operation of everyone interested. Are you doing your part by writing, telegraphing or interviewing your representatives in congress?

The local and national trade organizations seem to have plenty of time and funds for tea parties and similar enterprises. The full resources of such bodies, it seems to us, could be well employed in an effort to amend the proposed harmful import restrictions.

Plant Quarantine Protest.

Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, Pa., and McHutchison & Co., New York, are circulating a strong protest against the horticultural import prohibition and their efforts should have the prompt and earnest support of all the florists, seedsmen and nurserymen in the country. This protest closes as follows:

"For more than four years our country has cheerfully assisted and helped to keep a great portion of the Belgian population from starving; this embraces the great plant-growing districts around Ghent and Bruges, where, before the war, upwards of 1,000 nurseries were operated, a large part of whose products was exported to the United States. We have sent our kin and friends to bleed on the battlefields of devastated Belgium to help to return these people to freedom, and now that this has been accomplished, and they are preparing to take up their customary vocations in anticipation of supporting themselves as they have always bountifully done before, and they come to us and offer us their horticultural specialties, as they did before the war (the majority of which we cannot procure elsewhere or which we cannot produce ourselves), we will have to hold our hands up in horror and say:

"While we have cheerfully helped to feed and clothe you, and while our soldiers have died on the battlefield to give you your freedom, we cannot buy your azaleas, bay trees, Norfolk Island pines, rhododendrons, palms, your begonias, gloxinias and other specialties (as badly as we need them) because there is a federal horticultural board of five men in Washington who, while they have no record that you have in the past sent us any insect pests that have been dangerous to our country, they fear that there may be such pests hidden away in your country and that these might, in leaf or soil, escape the rigid examination which your entomologists give them before you ship them, and that they might even escape the careful examination which our state and federal departments give them on their arrival here, and thus become a serious menace. While you continue to have our sympathy, we cannot think of purchasing your horticultural products."

"Think it over, and if you want to assist to place horticulture in its proper position, write to your congressman at once. He will stand by what is right if you submit the facts properly to him."

Freight Embargo Raised.

All the railroads entering New York, including the New York Central, West Shore, Pennsylvania, Erie, Lackawanna, Jersey Central, Baltimore and Ohio, and New Haven, have raised the embargo on export freight. Carload export freight will be handled under permits as heretofore.

NEW YEAR'S BUSINESS DISAPPOINTING.

Business for the week ending January 4, including New Year's, was only fair. Most of the plants being disposed of for Christmas, one could only have expected an increased sale of cut flowers for the first holiday in the new year, but it did not materialize. Perhaps it was the reaction, due to the high prices demanded previously, which had a tendency to keep the general public from even asking for stock. This is not only locally, for the shipping trade, too, eased up quite a bit. Strange to say, with the holidays past the influenza epidemic has disappeared entirely, thus putting a quietus on the demand for funeral work. It may have its good sides, for nearly all varieties of cut flowers, such as roses, lilies, sweet peas and violets, are arriving in only small quantities. Stevia is plentiful, but finds ready sale. The carnation situation is less favorable than it has been; daily cuts are increasing, but even at reduced prices, they lag. The few snapdragons and calendulas that come in, are sold at sight.

NOTES.

Albert Grunewald, of Grunewald Bros., of North Milwaukee, received his honorable discharge and arrived home, December 31. Another North Milwaukee boy, namely Erwin Harnack, formerly with Wm. Manke & Co., has sent word that he expects to return home about January 15.

We had our first taste of winter January 3, when the thermometer registered 18° below at 7 A. M., but it did not last long, for January 5 it again was 18° above. The ground is covered with enough snow to insure good sleighing.

Hugo Locker & Sons, who specialize in sweet peas, claim that due to the recent dark weather, their cut does not come up to expectations. Still, they are realizing such good returns that it makes them feel good anyhow.

With the first of the new year, many local growers are now turning their attention to the plant culture for Easter and bedding stock for the spring trade.

As there was no quorum present, January 2, due no doubt to the extreme cold weather, there was no business session of the local florists' club.

Otto Sylvester, Sr., of Oconomowoc, called on his local friends last week.

E. O.

Protest Against The Horticultural Import Prohibition.

You are, of course, familiar with the recent ruling of the Federal Horticultural Board at Washington which prohibits, after June 1, 1919, the importation of all plants and bulbs, in which the Nursery, Seed and Florist trade is interested, excepting the following few items: Lily bulbs, Lily of the Valley, Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissi and Crocus—absolutely nothing else in the line of bulbs can be imported from any foreign country.

In the line of plants you may bring in fruit-trees stocks, seedlings, cuttings and scions of fruit trees, and you may import Manetti, Multiflora and Rugosa Rose stocks for budding or grafting, but absolutely nothing else in the way of plants.

Do you realize how radical and far-reaching this embargo is, how seriously it will affect, not only every importer, but every individual in the trade who handles bulbs, plants or cut flowers; from the largest importer down to the smallest grower, florist or dealer?

There will be no Azaleas, Rhododendrons, Spireas, Araucarias, Dracenas or Boxwoods. Orchids will only be a memory, and there will be missing in our stores and in our gardens, hundreds of other varieties of plants and cut flowers on which heretofore we have depended upon European sources and which were profitable for the American grower to develop and were a source of revenue to the retailer.

Many of these subjects will never be produced in this country and such that, after years of preparation, may become developed here, will necessarily have to be sold at a price which will make them prohibitive to the average present purchaser of this class of stock.

One of the peculiar points in this ruling of the Federal Horticultural Board, which we are unable to harmonize with the Board's effort to prevent the risk of importing dangerous pests, is the fact that they consider it safe to import Manetti, Multiflora and Rugosa Roses for budding and grafting purposes, but do not consider it safe to let these same roses come in with named varieties (such as Killarney, Ophelia, Radiance or other sorts) grafted or budded upon them. The root of the Manetti, the Multiflora or the Rugosa remains the same, but the top will be that of the named variety, i. e., Killarney, Ophelia, Radiance or whatever the variety may be and it is absolutely impossible for an insect to be imported on the one and not on the other, so, why should these Rose-stocks be permitted to come in (in which only a very few growers who graft or bud roses are interested or benefited) and the named varieties, in which practically everyone who grows and sells plants is interested, be excluded?

Furthermore, if it is safe to import a Lily bulb, a Lily of the Valley, a Hyacinth, Tulip, Narcissus or Crocus, what infestation affects the hundreds of other bulbs that are excluded that justifies the Board to say, "You are not to bring in a Dahlia, Tuberous-rooted Begonia, Gloxinia, Gladiolus, Spanish Iris, Oxalis, Scilla, Snowdrop, Crown Imperial or other equally harmless bulb?"

There have been two meetings of the Federal Horticultural Board at Washington, D. C., during the past six months—one of them on May 28, the other on October 18, to which all interested in this subject were invited to be present and to offer protests if any. At both meetings the Nurserymen's Association, as well as the Legislative Committee of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists, and a number of individual growers were present, all of whom gave valuable data for the proper enlightenment of said Federal Horticultural Board. They were most cordially received, attentively and patiently listened to—even thanked—for the information given, but that is all.

Why all this information which was given in good faith has been turned down, the Federal Horticultural Board does not tell us; they simply say: "After June 1, 1919, you cannot import anything but the few items in bulbs, fruit-tree stocks and roses for grafting purposes noted above."

Whether the action taken by the Federal Horticultural Board is in accordance with the law as enacted by Congress, which created their power, we do not feel competent to pass upon, but we are satisfied, however, and confident that it was not intended as the spirit of this Act, that the policies and destinies of the entire Horticultural Trade, with its millions of dollars of investment, should be placed in the hands of five (5) members of the Department of Agriculture.

Your Congressman has the means of finding this out, and if you will appeal to him for aid in the matter we are certain that he will investigate and see to it that such power, if it exists, is changed so that the Horticultural Trade will be placed in the high position to which it is entitled.

Finally: For more than four years our country has cheerfully assisted and helped to keep a great portion of the Belgian population from starving; this embraces the great plant-growing districts around Ghent and Bruges, where before the war, upwards of one thousand nurseries were operated, a large part of whose products was exported to the United States. We have sent our kin and friends to bleed on the battlefields of devastated Belgium to help to return these people to freedom, and now that this has been accomplished and they are preparing to take up their customary vocations in anticipation of supporting themselves as they have always bountifully done before, and they come to us and offer us their horticultural specialties, as they did before the war (the majority of which we cannot procure elsewhere or which we cannot produce ourselves) we will have to hold our hands up in horror and say:

"While we have cheerfully helped to feed and clothe you and while our soldiers have died on the battlefield to give you freedom, we cannot buy your Azaleas, Bay Trees, Norfolk Island Pines, Rhododendrons, Palms, your Begonias, Gloxinias and other specialties (as badly as we need them) because there is a Federal Horticultural Board of five men in Washington who, while they have no record that you have in the past sent us any insect pests that have been dangerous to our country, they fear that there may be such pests hidden away in your country and that these might, in leaf or soil, escape the rigid examination which your entomologists give them before you ship them, and that they might even escape the careful examination which our State and Federal Departments give them on their arrival here, and thus become a serious menace. While you continue to have our sympathy, we cannot think of purchasing your horticultural products!"

Think it over, and if you want to assist to place Horticulture in its proper position, write to your Congressman at once. He will stand by what is right if you submit the facts properly to him.

CHICAGO VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE NEW YORK

Boston.

GOOD DEMAND; SUPPLY LIMITED.

Business has exceeded all expectations, with stock scarce and prices high, roses bringing from 20 to 40 cents, carnations $12.50 to $15 per 100, sweet peas $4, callas $4 per dozen, Easter lilies 80 cents per flower and violets $3 per 100.

NOTES.

John F. Dowd, who entered the service as a private and was later commissioned first lieutenant, is back in his old position as buyer for Thomas F. Galvin. Joseph Shuman has been released from service in the navy and is back at H. M. Robinson & Co's.

At P. L. Carbone's business is good and the windows are arranged with excellent stock in variety.

Alfred Hudson, salesman for William Elliott, is confined to his home with influenza.

Penn, the Florist, reports excellent business, with funeral work increasing daily.

Welch Bros. Co. are having a good call for both flowers and supplies.

B. A. Snyder & Co. report trade in general very satisfactory. S. K. G.

Cleveland.

SUPPLY EXCEEDS REQUIREMENTS.

There has been a gradual but noticeable increase in the supply of cut flowers since the holidays, and while the demand is good the receipts exceed requirements and the street merchants are taking the surplus, of which Killarney roses, pink and white, and short American Beauties form the greater part. Carnations are in better supply, but clean up every day. Easter lilies and callas are plentiful and are offered at prices which are nearly normal. Sweet peas, freesias and Paper

Whites are included in the daily offerings.

NOTES.

Paul W. Cunningham, son of O. E. Cunningham, Collinwood florist, who was reported missing several weeks ago, was killed in action at Chateau Thierry, September 12, according to a telegram received by his father last week. Another son, also with the American forces in France, will bring the remains back to this city if possible on his return.

Among the influenza sufferers the past week were Mrs. P. C. Hahn and two daughters and Mrs. Joseph Strezeck and her brother, Frank. C. F. B.

Pittsburgh.

SUPPLY PLENTIFUL BUT DEMAND LIGHT.

Business has been rather quiet during the past week with stock arriving in more plentiful supply. Carnations, which have been scarce for some time, are now seen in larger quantities and the top price at this writing is $1 to $6 per 100. Roses are ample for all needs and prices hold firm especially for American Beauty and Columbie. Short roses are much in demand for funeral work. There was no unusual call for New Years about the only movement being in corsages and table decorations. Paper Whites and lilies are more plentiful than they have been at any time this season. Freesias and other like flowers are now coming to the market and are very welcome additions. American Beauties are bringing 60 cents as the best price for specials. Violets are still scarce but large shipments are expected soon. Sweet peas which have been a short item are now more plentiful. Smilax is scarce.

NOTES.

A card has been received from Ted Joyce, who is with the heavy artillery

"over there," the first news from him since he enlisted last April.

Michael Kronis is still confined to the Mercy hospital and is improving very slowly. M.

Cincinnati.

BUSINESS BECOMING NORMAL.

The supply is much heavier than it was during the time immediately preceding the holidays, while the demand for stock is not as active. Prices have dropped to a point that is more like normal for this time of the year. Shipping business is good. Roses are more plentiful than they have been for some weeks. As a whole, they are of good quality and meet with an active call. Carnations are in good supply. Receipts of Easter lilies and callas are in fairly large and good. Narcissi are in a moderate supply. They have been selling well. Sweet peas find a ready market. Stevia continues to meet with a good demand. Other offerings include violets, orchids, lily of the valley, calandulas, forget-me-nots, baby primroses and snapdragons.

NOTES.

Boys who are overseas have sent acknowledgments of the Christmas remembrances received by them from the local florists. The first arrived last week.

Gus Adrian had the best Christmas business since entering the business. Everything on the place that was valuable was disposed of during the rush.

Ed. Bossmeyer, of C. E. Critchell's force, who was away from the store all of last week, has returned to his desk.

CARNATIONS ARE MORE PLENTIFUL.

The year 1919 brought with it the first cold wave of the season for this vicinity, and the temperature since then, up to the opening of this week, has registered from 4 degrees to 10 degrees below zero the greater part of the time. The express companies refused to pick up packages the latter part of last week owing to the severe cold weather, when the wholesalers were obliged to deliver them to the depots themselves and only succeeded in getting them aboard the trains after they released them from all responsibility in regard to freezing while in transit. The pick-up service has been resumed, but the express companies are only receiving the shipments subject to the shipper or purchaser's risk, which according to most of the dealers, will fall on the latter as they see no reason why they should assume the responsibility. Business has been fairly good considering conditions, and while there is enough stock to go around, it is none too plentiful with the possible exception of carnations, which are now arriving in larger quantities. Roses are in short supply and are moving well at good figures. Carnations are in fair demand at prices ranging from $2 to $10 per 100, according to quality. Lilies continue to clean up early at high rates, and the same holds true for callas, which appear to be a trifle more plentiful. Stevia is not in as large supply as it has been, but at that, there is plenty to meet all demands. Violets are arriving in larger quantities, but some of the shipments are reaching here in very poor condition. Lily of the valley is holding its own at the advertised quotations and so are orchids and gardenias. Calendulas, pansies, white and yellow narcissi, freesias, mimmette, sweet peas and other miscellaneous stock are included in the daily offerings but the majority of the items are in short supply. The city demand, which has been very quiet, is improving. The out-of-town call is holding its own, and a few brisk days would find the market pretty well cleaned up in all lines.

Henry Arnold.

NOTES.

Nicholas Karthausser, well known to the trade as proprietor of the picnic grove conducted under his name and where the trade has met on different occasions, died January 4, at the age of 58. He was a member of the florists' club for many years, and had a host of friends in the trade. The funeral was held Wednesday, 9:30 a. m., to St. Henry's Church, where high mass was celebrated at 10 a. m. The remains were laid to rest in the family lot at St. Henry's cemetery.

A. L. Vaughan, of A. L. Vaughan & Co., and family, have set the date of their departure for Florida as January 16. Mr. Vaughan's business will be in good hands during his brief absence, when Miss Charlotte Paradise will have charge of the office, and William Johnson, ably assisted by William Timme, will look after the floor.

Earl Poehlmann, eldest son of August Poehlmann, who was a member of the 4th Co., 13th Infantry Replacement and Training Troops, stationed at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark., has been given an honorable discharge from the army and returned home this week.

Mrs. Louise Natzke, 2336 West Nineteenth street, has received word from her two sons, Herman and W. L. Natzke, who are with the American forces in France, that they are both safe and sound—but anxious to get back home.

Mrs. Horton of the Bassett & Washburn office force, is rejoicing over the arrival of her son Roland, who has returned safely from overseas with a portion of the Blackhawk division.

Mrs. John Prickett, only daughter of H. C. Blewitt and sister of Harry Blewitt, died Wednesday, January 8, at Des Plaines at the age of 42 years. She was born in London, Eng., and was well known to the trade in this vicinity, who was always extended the hand of hospitality whenever they visited the Blewitt family. The funeral will be held Friday, January 10, at 2 o'clock from the home on Minor street, with interment at the Town-of-Main cemetery at Park Ridge. Mr. Prickett is associated with Harry Blewitt in the growing business under the name of the Des Plaines Floral Co. Both families have the sympathy of the trade in the loss of a loving wife, daughter and sister.

George Asmus says that the telephone demand for Christmas trees was so great at Schiller's west side establishment owing to the extreme shortage that the force was handicapped to a large extent in taking care of the regular customers, who found it difficult to secure telephone connections with the store the last days owing to the constant call from other parties inquiring if the firm had any trees for sale. Mr. Asmus says that the occupation of the wire by these people proved rather costly, besides causing much annoyance.

Henry Arnold, formerly with O. A. & L. A. Tonner, who enlisted in the Navy some time ago, is likely to be ordered to sea again from the Great Lakes Naval training station, where he is at present located. He was on the battleship Massachusetts during the war long enough to earn a gold stripe, but was sent back here shortly after the armistice was signed.

Allie Zech, of Zech & Mann, received a letter this week from August Frezza, who is with the American troops in France, in which he mentioned that he is in the best of health and anxious to get back to the good old United States. He was in the employ of the Walter A. Amling Co. at Maywood up to the time he joined the colors.

N. J. Wietor says that the force at Wietor Bros' greenhouses is well along with the propagating, several benches of carnation cuttings and young rose stock being almost ready. He says that bench rose plants never sold so well before as this season.

H. Van Gelder, president and manager of Percy Jones, Inc., in speaking of greens the other day, remarked that he never saw such fine leucothoe as Earl Touch, of the Grossberg-Tyler-Finnermann Co., reports that he found brisk business on his traveling since the holidays with everyone enthusiastic over the bright outlook for the coming season.

A. T. Pyfer has been jollied quite a bit by all the customers at A. T. Pyfer & Co.'s store the past week when he had his mustache shaved off. Some had to look twice to make sure it was he.

Mike Maier, son of Chas. E. Maier, 4106 Armitage avenue, who has been with the colors at Camp Forrest, Ga., was mustered out last week at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Mich.

William Winterson, father of E. F. Winterson, well-known wholesale florist, is mourning the loss of his old school-day friend, Mrs. James Turner, who died last week.

Albert Marck, who has been employed as foreman in some of the leading eastern plant establishments, is now with Poehlmann Bros. Co.

Henry M. Robinson, of Boston, Mass., has been in the city for about a week on a combined business and pleasure trip.

The directors of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association will meet at their store next Tuesday, January 14.

Al. Campiche, who has been with the colors at South Carolina, is back home with an honorable discharge.

Ove Gnatt and Fred Henoch, of the Ove Gnatt Co., La. Porte, Ind., were welcome victors this week.

Mrs. Guy Reyburn is seriously ill at the American hospital with double pneumonia.

Peter Pearson cut his first Proserpine tulips January 6.

DEMAND IS QUIET AFTER RUSH.

Trade during the past week may be said to be, on the whole, very quiet, and yet some retailers were favored with a considerable amount of funeral work and the meagre supply of flowers available, made it doubly hard for them. Very few florists report any activity, except in spasmodic calls for flowers or plants for the sick and for funerals. It is apparent to many, who are willing to see it, that the present dullness is due largely to the people's slow recovery from the effect of the high prices that prevailed during the holidays, and clever salesmanship is required to dissipate the thoughts, uppermost in the minds of the public, that florists this year are guilty of a form of profiteering. A fair amount of stock of seasonable sorts is coming in, and the quality of most items in the list is creditable to the growers who are fortunate enough to have it.

NOTES.

CHRISTMAS BUSINESS SURPRISINGLY GOOD.

Christmas week could not have dawned more auspiciously for florists than it did this season, and even the most optimistic could have been excused had they entertained doubts of big business. Florists faced a combination of circumstances that were truly discouraging. In the first place, it rained here almost constantly during the period and there was a shortage of flowers and plants such as few in the trade had experienced before. But neither the rain nor the scarcity of stock seemed in the least to deter the public, rejoicing over the end of the war, from making this a Christmas long to be remembered. They flocked into the flower stores from morning till night, paying unheard of prices for this market without a murmur and everything that looked like a flower was eagerly snapped up. The incessant demand for funeral work caused by the influenza epidemic, which has been raging in this city for the past three months, has created a great shortage of cut flowers of all kinds. Naturally, the Christmas demand accentuated this shortage, and cut flowers brought the highest prices in years. Roses were the most plentiful in the market, but none were sold at retail under $5 per dozen. They brought as high as $24. There were very few carnations to be had, and these sold for $3 and up. Violets and lily of the valley were in great demand, but very few came into this city. Plants were also in great demand but there were not near enough to go around. Poinsettias were fairly plentiful and of good quality and were planned up in a hurry. Begonias, cyclamens and primroses were about the only other plants that were offered and all found eager buyers. In fact, this market has never before been so completely cleaned out as it was this year, and this, in the face of the unusual prices. Florists were forced in this emergency to divert much of the demand to artificial flowers and wreaths, and this was done with great success. Baskets of red ruscus and other materials that could be had, were arranged with all the skill of the various florists' art and these enjoyed a ready sale. Wreaths of holly and boxwood also sold well. All in all, it was a remarkable Christmas under the conditions and many florists report a substantial gain over last year's sales.

INFLUENZA CLOSES SCHRAMM BROS.

After working day and night for two months, turning out a record-breaking lot of funeral work for influenza victims in this city, the firm of Schramm Brothers were finally forced to close their doors because they themselves fell victims to this dread disease. Practically the entire management became sick in rapid succession, the first to succumb being Frank M. Schramm, general manager, followed by Albert M. Lehmann, greenhouse superintendent, George B. Schramm, chief designer, Leo Schramm, grower, William Niemiller, salesman, and Ralph Yenor, delivery man. Under these circumstances, with the Christmas rush looming up, it was decided to close the store until after the holiday because help could not be had at this time. Only telegraph orders were filled. Mr. Lehmann is back on the job again and the rest of the sick are convalescing fast at the present writing.

NOTES.

The La Salle & Koch flower department, conducted in the largest retail store in this city by Schramm Brothers, broke all records this season. Due to the fact that Schramm Bros. were closed for Christmas on account of sickness, many of their customers were diverted to this department. Special offerings of basket effects of artificial materials were sold in great numbers to the big throng of holiday shoppers.

Miss Helen Patten, Madison avenue florist, says that under the discouraging conditions faced by florists this year, she was greatly surprised by the volume of her Christmas sales. People paid much higher prices and seemed to think nothing of it. She is of the opinion, now, that florists could easily get better profits if they had the courage to charge reasonable prices throughout the year.

Mrs. J. B. Freeman, of "The Flowers," enjoyed a record-breaking Christmas business and was fortunate in having on hand an excellent and varied display of cut flowers and plants. John Lambert again revealed his excellent art by arranging a very tasteful holiday window and some handsome basket effects made up of seasonable artificial materials.

Max Spanner, in his first Christmas season in his new location in the Ohio building, had the largest business of his long career here. He states that artificial baskets and wreaths sold briskly, and that he completely cleaned up on cut flowers. He had a comprehensive showing of roses and carnations.

The Helmar Flower Shop, on Madison avenue, had a beautiful Christmas window that attracted a lot of favorable attention from passers-by. This firm reports a wonderful business, and seemed to be fairly well supplied with cut flowers and plants.

Tom Magee, of the Scottwood Greenhouse, who is noted for his specimen plants, had a splendid array of poinsettias, cyclamens and crotons. These were soon disposed of to the anxious plant lovers who visited his establishment Christmas week.

Feniger's window, on Adams street, was filled with baskets of artificial flowers, of which he sold a great quantity. He made little effort to supply the demand for cut flowers and plants. Funeral work has continued heavy here and there seems to be no let up. Telegraph orders form a good share of the business received. A. C. K.

Kansas City, Mo.

HOLIDAY BUSINESS VERY GOOD.

The volume of Christmas business in this market was very satisfactory, considering cold, snowy weather which prevailed and the inconvenience both in purchases and delivery occasioned by a street car strike. A heavy snowfall prevented many out-of-town shipments. Holly and Christmas greens, which were delayed in arrival, were in short supply and moved at higher prices than ever before, especially in the tree line. Cut stock was plentiful and brought good prices, although many late arrivals left the stores with quite a stock when the time came to close. Pot plants of Lorraine begonias, cyclamens, and arrangements in baskets took well and in most cases at prices above the average. Delivery was expensive, as autos had to be hired in some cases at $3 and $4 per hour. New Year's business fell off considerably compared with former years, the same detrimental conditions existing and there was little call for corsages.

NOTES.

H. Kusik & Co. held over more stock than on any previous Christmas, it being almost impossible to make shipments to customers out of the city and the local demand was not heavy enough to absorb the surplus. They are very well satisfied, however, with returns.

The W. L. Rock Flower Co., in addition to usual good stock, had quite a feature in fancy bird cages. Christmas trade was good considering conditions and the entire force was kept busy until Christmas night. A fairly good New Year's business was reported.

W. J. Barnes reports a very good Christmas trade and sold out clean. He stopped making deliveries by noon of December 24, buyers after that time caring for their purchases. Cemetery wreaths went fast.

At Samuel Murray's attractive store a very satisfactory trade was reported. Orders for corsages were numerous, made-up arrangements sold well and splendid plants were a feature.

The Alpha Floral Co. sold an immense quantity of wreaths in addition to cut flowers and plants, but had a hard time getting them out.

Miss Lou Boggess had an excellent business for Christmas, but New Year's was not up to standard. She specialized in Christmas wreaths and these went very well.

Fred. Fromholdt reports good business both for Christmas and New Year's. He made a feature of bouquets and corsages.

Arthur Nowell reports everything went in good shape, except that deliveries were expensive.

T. J. Noll & Co. had a fine line of stock and sold out very well considering the conditions.

E. J. Barnes, who has been an influenza sufferer, has recovered and is now on the job again.

A. F. Barbe reports a good general demand, with a heavy call for cemetery wreaths.

Charles Thomas of the Rosery enjoyed a good general business.

E. J. B.

SUPPLY GOOD IN QUANTITY AND QUALITY.

Business following Christmas sustained itself reasonably well, although there was little activity at New Year's. A resumption of social events has helped, however, in the way of decorations and corsages, sufficient to clean up the daily receipts. Stock has been fair, both in quantity and quality. Roses are none too plentiful, but carnations are now in fair supply and narcissi, both white and yellow, are abundant. The latter bring $1.50 per dozen. There is a good assortment of fine plants, but the supply of poinsettias seems to have been exhausted. There are cuts of sweet peas and a few Easter lilies and callas.

NOTES.

The Joy Floral Co. had a fine Christmas trade and cleaned up well with a heavy call for wreaths and cemetery decorations. They moved quantities of white and yellow narcissi at $1 to $1.50 per dozen.

Gery Bros. have had a supply of good stock and have arranged several elaborate decorations for the New Year celebrations.

1919 TRADE OPENS WITH PROMISE.

Stocks are meagre in variety, but plentiful in quantity. The market is unable to absorb the volume of carnations reaching it, the bulk of the crop having come in late, and at a period when the demand has somewhat weakened. Any lack of supply in home-grown roses is more than made up for by cold-storage stock released by the big wholesalers. The quality, as compared with fresh cuttings, is poor, but is made to serve the purpose in funeral work. Prices on staple flowers have dropped materially, particularly in the case of carnations, which are selling for $1.50 a dozen, compared with $3, even before the holiday trade set in. On the whole, the past year has been a prosperous one for the local trade, in spite of labor shortage and of fuel scarcity last spring. During the latter part of the year, funeral work was so heavy as to absorb any kind of stock at high prices. Trade is now fair, and there is a very hopeful outlook for 1919. Growers who allowed a portion of their ranges to remain idle, by reason of uncertainty with regard to labor and coal, are preparing to resume full operations.

Among applicants recently taking the state civil service examination for landscape gardeners for state service was Lars Hansen Snor, of Newark, O., 82 years old, a former brigadier general in the Danish army. He and his father before him were landscape gardeners in Denmark, but for many years he has been a resident of the United States. Although enjoying a pension from a railroad company, with which he was formerly employed, he considers himself too capable, physically and otherwise, to be idle. J.

Buffalo.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS SATISFACTORY.

Weather conditions in this city are now running to form with low temperatures and snow, and nothing better could have been desired for handling the Christmas stock. The reports regarding the holiday demand were very flattering, and it is safe to say that the volume was greater than last year. Plants again played a very important part and these with choice basket arrangements sold better than cut flowers. Roses, carnations, freesias and sweet peas were the most plentiful offerings. Violets met their usual sale and orchids went better than ever.

NOTES.

New Year's day found S. A. Anderson at his desk in the county treasurer's office surrounded by an array of flowers never before seen except in a florist's establishment. Many handsome pieces were sent by the trade in this and other cities.

Funeral work has been plentiful and the visit to this city, January 4, of Secretary Baker, created a call for some very good stock for table decorations.

Next month will find the local stores rather short of stock usually plentiful and holding sway until the spring flowers arrive.

The skidding of an automobile caused the wrecking of the delivery car of Stroh's Flower Shop.

Charles Netsch, Genesee street, who was recently discharged in bankruptcy, has resumed business.

SHORTAGE IN SUPPLY CONTINUES.

The past week has been a continuation of the great shortage, the stock selling out every day at prices about 20 per cent below those of the holidays. The weather has been muggy, considerable rain, with no sunshine and winding up with a little snow and the glass below 20. This has been very bad for all kinds of flowers, particularly carnations, which do not open well and lack substance. Snapdragon is becoming more plentiful, as is freesia and Paper Whites, which are all in good demand and help out quite a little. The Christmas crops of Easter lilies are still cutting from the backward plants. Mrs. Russell is going off, but Callas are in fair supply. Calendulas are preferred by some to carnations and some very good stock is offered. Stevia is almost cut out. Violets are scarce. Cattleyas are shortening up and white lilac takes the place of lily of the valley and sells out every day. Considering the weather, roses are very good. The Killarneys, pink and double white, particularly the latter, are fine. Champ Weiland is a favorite, as is also Maryland. Ophelia is grabbed up at sight. Little Sweetheart is also in demand. Mrs. Russell is going off, but Columbia holds its own. Sweet peas have dropped their buds badly the past week, yet a goodly quantity has been offered in the market. Southern asparagus comes in quantities that a year or two ago would have swamped the market. Now it takes it all and cries for more. It is wonderful where it all goes to.

January 6.—Shipments from the growers were a trifle larger this morning, but the demand took all that was offered at last week's prices. The continued high prices are said to be a menace to the business, but as long as the stock sells up, and the out-of-town demand continues, there will be little change.

CLUB MEETING.

The January meeting of the florists' club, with "Publicity Promotion" as the feature, was a grand success, both in point of attendance and interest taken. A dinner complimentary to the visitors, in which 90 sat around the tables, opened the evening's exercises, and the meeting was called to order at 8 p. m. by President Harvey, who introduced Charles H. Grakelov, who conducted the proceeding in his splendidly efficient manner. His introduction of the speakers was a treat in itself. Henry Penn, Major O'Keefe, Wallace R. Pierson, Wm. F. Gude, John Young and W. F. Therikildson presented publicity pointers and the benefit already received and to follow from it. In a masterly and convincing manner, Robert Craig made a fine address that closed with a positive oration on the beauty of flowers that captivated his audience. Victor Ridenour and Robert Pyle also made short addresses that were to the point. Subscriptions amounting to about $2,000 for four years were collected in a short time. There was an exhibition of choice carnations and roses, among them a new dark sport of Ophelia, and John Cook's new white seedling, Mrs. John Cook. The attendance numbered about 200, many visitors being present from

THE PACKING PROBLEM.

A large wholesaler was speaking of the shortsightedness of many growers, who under the great handicap of the extreme high prices of coal, labor and all kinds of greenhouse material and supplies, had still produced good flowers, and then in order to save a nickel or two on proper sized boxes, packed the stock so closely that when opened up, it was found so damaged as to reduce its selling value from 20 to 25 per cent. Comparatively few growers realize the importance of the proper handling of their cut flowers. There are far too many 90 per cent men, good growers, but lacking the final punch that puts their stock over the top. In 25 roses, there would be some too open and others too tight. It is the same with carnations, snapdragons, calendulas, violets, etc. All flowers should be cut just right, according to the season, and the man who does not know how, should come to the market, notice the way in which the flowers arrive, get the ideas of his commission dealers as to cutting, handling and packing. Then take a look around some of the stores and talk with those who meet the ultimate consumers. They will get ideas, lots of them, and a better knowledge or viewpoint of the business than they ever had before. Growers should keep in close touch with their dealers all the time. A dime or a quarter spent in telephoning will often be of great material benefit. Their stock represents their labor and should receive as much care in its safeguarding as the money into which it is converted.

NOTES.

Sunburst is being discarded by some growers, but the Philadelphia Wholesale Florists' Exchange handle this variety. Lily of the Valley is another very scarce article which is seen here.

John Berger, of Berger Bros., has been on the sick list since the holidays. He is now about again, but not at the store. Easter lilies, sweet peas and carnations are in good supply.

The Jos. Heacock Co. sold out in Boston and cibotums. Kentias also sold well. Not half enough roses for the demand, is the condition at this time.

Carnations and snapdragons are quantity stocks with the Leo Niessen Co. Roses are increasing slightly in volume and freesia is a feature.

Ferns are good stock at present, the demand at Christmas making great inroads in the supply. K.

NEW YEAR'S BUSINESS MODERATE.

To study folks like the sailor who said to his shipmate: "Jack, I pity the poor souls on shore tonight," there is something fascinating in the raging storm. Again, when the storm has passed, the sun shines, the courageous and timid alike enjoy the bright beams and the pure air. But there was a medium, and not a happy one, in the state of the weather that overspread this city and vicinity New Year's day, 1919—see that you write it 1919. Fog, mist, humidity, slippery streets and general discomfort. On our coast, a great ship, bearing over 2,000 returning veterans, anchors herself in a sand-bank. On land, drunken and reckless chauffeurs, always dangerous, become a deadly menace, with many accidents, and even the sober and careful drivers are anxious. The stale atmosphere and the stale beer combined, produce a more than usual number of shootings, stabbings and minor breaches of the peace. Thus was the New Year, 1919, ushered in on the great city. The florists and their patrons could not escape, more than others, the weather conditions. On the morning and forenoon of December 31, the warmest day of similar date in 20 years, there was fair activity in both wholesale and retail stores, but rain came in the afternoon and New Year's eve the aforesaid conditions set in. "It does not seem like New Year's eve," said one old timer of West 28th street, and it did not, at least, not in that district. But few buyers were about and the majority of the stores were closed by 10 p. m., whereas in former years, they were usually all open till after midnight. A few buyers were around in the early morning of January 1, but buying was light. Prices remained firm, but there was enough stock to supply the demand. Rain fell heavily and almost continuously January 2, and taken with the previous bad weather, had a depressing effect on the market. It is the general sentiment of dealers that the New Year's business was about equal to that of a good Saturday; on Saturdays the market is usually active.

January 6.—Business is fairly active with high prices and a light supply. It does not appear likely that there will be much of a drop in prices before the end of February. In addition to the demand for social events, there is a steady call for flowers for hospital patients and other sick folks, and for funeral work. The sudden death of Colonel Roosevelt, this morning, was a great shock to the people of this city. The weather is cold, but not severe, with flurries of snow.

NOTES.

It will be noted that President Wilson has cabled the state department to ask Congress for an immediate appropriation of $100,000,000 to prevent starvation in Europe. The president being on the ground, is unquestionably well informed. It is also reported that Herbert Hoover states that: "America must send $1,500,000 worth of food to Europe this winter." It is but right that we should feed the starving peoples. But let us consider another phase of our intercourse with the European countries. It is an old saying that "God helps those who help themselves," and the best ultimate aid we can give the people of Europe is to help them re-establish their industries. The feature that concerns many of them, as well as the florist, seed and nursery trade of this country, may here be mentioned. While Columbia is being called on to act the "Lady Bountiful" to Europe, the federal horticultural board, with the approval of the secretary of agriculture, is not only interposing a barrier against the business of members of our own people, but also cutting off a source of income from many of the needy abroad, with particular reference to Belgium, which has been a great sufferer, and previous to the war, derived a large income from the export of trees and shrubs. Of course, the present demands for assistance to a starving people must and will be met, but there is food for reflection on the future. If we may judge by news being sent out from Washington, and Paris, there are people who are expecting an early millennial dawn. If we are all going to be brothers, we should help our brethren to help themselves.

Funeral services for the late George Allen, son of J. K. Allen, whose sudden death was reported in our issue of January 4, were held at his late residence on the evening of January 1. The Presbyterian pastor officiating. Interment was in Woodlawn cemetery on January 2. His death is believed to have been caused by a congestive chill. He was a young man of genial temperament and pleasing address and much sympathy is felt for his widow and young daughter, his father, mother, brother and sister.

John Mallon, of James Mallon's Sons retailers, opposite Borough Hall, Brooklyn, is one of the interesting men of the trade. The store probably has a number on Fulton street, but no one needs to know it. "Mallon's, opposite Borough Hall" having been a Brooklyn institution for many years. John Mallon literally grew up with the business and has some very decided opinions about high prices.

James Chatmas, who for several years had conducted a retail store at Eighth avenue and 145th street, died recently after an illness of four days of pneumonia. His two young children died soon after of the same disease. The widow survives. The business is being continued by two brothers, Peter and Peatro Chatmas.

Henry Schmeckpepper, a florist of Glendale, a suburb of Brooklyn, has a new light pink Japanese incurved chrysanthemum that was passed on by the committee of the Chrysanthemum Society of America last November and awarded $6 points. It is a sport of Edwin Seidewitz.

J. Goldstein, formerly of Goldstein & Futterman, has gone into the wholesale business for himself at 114 West 28th street. For the past 15 years he has been connected with the business in different capacities, in this city and Brooklyn, and bears a good reputation.

Although Futterman Bros. is a new firm name in the wholesale district, at least one of its members, Eli Futterman, has for a number of years been well known as a hustler. His brother, who was with him during the existence of the old firm, is also an active man. There is now quite a sprinkling of the flowers of bulbous stock in the wholesale stores. In addition to Paper Whites, which have been in for several weeks, Golden Spurs and freesias are now seen.

James McCollum, for the past 16 years superintendent of parks in Paterson, N. J., died, January 2. A more extended notice will be found in the obituary column.

The annual ball of the Greek-American Florists' Association will be held in the Palm Garden, 58th street, near Lexington avenue, on the night of February 27.

Charles Pajan, who had worked with his brother, Louis C. Pajan in the latter's retail store, 2424 Eighth avenue, died recently of pneumonia.

The first Golden Spur narcissus noticed in the market was received the past week by the United Cut Flower Co., 111 West 28th street.

Manager McCarthy, of the retail firm of James Wehr, Inc., Fulton street, Brooklyn, advises us that their holiday trade has been good.

Theodore Malandre, of the retail firm of Malandre Brothers, and the firm's buyer, who has been ill of influenza, is now recovering.

President-elect Kessler will give a dinner to the officers and past presidents of the florists' club on the night of January 11.

Mrs. Retta Rankin, manager of the House of Ferns, 41 West 28th street, reports an excellent holiday trade.

In addition to other good stock, the Henshaw Floral Co., 127 West 28th street, had a fine stock of irises.

SHORT SUPPLY HERE AS ELSEWHERE.

To say that the volume of Christmas business was better than ever, but puts it mildly. The number of sales were not as great as last year, but the higher prices brought in the total. Christmas eve developed a severe snow storm which kept down the cash sales for the day, but with the many advance orders that had been taken, everything in sight was used up. Had we been able to sell stock at prices similar to other years, there is no telling what could have been done, but when some stores could not sell roses under $7.50 per dozen for selects, the only grade available, and carnations not less than $5.00 per dozen for the best grades, you can figure on the handicap. What good flowering plants that could be had, realized good prices, and made up baskets and fancy arrangements all sold out. This market was never so well cleaned up. The unfavorable weather for the early winter, held back the blooms of most growers, and the cut was very much below the average.

What stock there was, showed good quality, and as to freshness, was all that could be desired, while the prices were the highest ever reached in this section. American Beauties, being off crop, Russell was in most demand, $15 per dozen being received for the best, while in other roses, $4.00 to $12.00 were asked, with very few of the cheaper flowers, as the stock mostly ran to the better grades. Carnations went from $2 to $4 per dozen, but $3.00 was the general price; the cheaper ones were hard to find. The best violets were $1.50 per bunch and cattleyas $1 to $1.50 each. The green goods for decorations were of the poorest possible kind; the holly, at from $7.50 to $10 per case, was the worst ever handled, and even those who were unfortunate enough to pay the higher price, could not see any difference in the quality. There was a little good boxwood, but the largest part was terrible and should never have been shipped out. Ground pine was good, but scarce, and reached the beautiful price of 25 cents per pound, if you were fortunate enough to be able to locate any. Cypripediums, ericas, cyclamens and Primula obconica and malacoides were the best of the flowering plants. Poinsettias and cherries helped out in most of the arrangements, while the plant growers sold out everything that had a bloom on it. The hotels and clubs, with many of the better residences, again decorated as in former years, so that it looks as if the florists were again on the road of unusual activity. White hyacinths, good ones of the Dutch variety, helped out nicely and were the only bulbous stock to be seen for basket use, though there were lilies, narcissi and a few freesias to be had. The retail stores all used their best efforts, and although still lacking many of the former experienced clerks, there were few complaints.

American Seed Trade Association.

F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., President; Wm. G. Searett, Baltimore, Md., First Vice-President; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., Second Vice-President; C. E. Kandel, Cleveland, O., Secretary-Treasurer. The thirty-seventh annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June, 1919.

CARROT and radish have declined in some quarters because of inability of holders to export.

GILROY, CALIF.—L. W. Wheeler, of the Pieters-Wheeler Seed Co., is planning an eastern trip.

WATERLOO, IA.—It is reported that a suit against Galloway Bros. Co. was begun December 28, 1918.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—J. C. Bodger, of the John Bodger & Sons Co., expects to start this week for the east.

GEORGE R. PEDRICK & SON, of Pedricktown, N. J., are mailing their customers a very handsome calendar for the year 1919.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE, New York, has received news that M. Holmgren, a former employee, died in Base Hospital 202, August 31.

FROSSER, WASH.—P. E. Nickelson, proprietor of the Prosser Nurseries, is planning to add a seed department to his establishment.

PETER HOLLENBACH, Chicago, has bought a lot adjoining his present West Lake street store on the east, and now has 65 feet frontage.

CONSULAR reports state that an office with a German in charge was opened in Copenhagen, Denmark, some time ago for the purpose of buying seeds for shipment to Germany.

GRASS SEED.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade January 8 were as follows: Timothy, $8.00 to $10.50 per 100 pounds, a drop of 25 cents in the high price of last week.

COLUMBUS, O.—The Wilson Seed Co. has renewed its lease on its present location for 10 years, will remodel the premises and increase the scope of the business, which has been very prosperous.

WAR put the growers of American tuberose bulbs out of business by cutting off an export trade amounting to three or four million bulbs annually. This year's crop will hardly amount to a couple of millions.

ONION SETS, reds, in the Chicago district are holding at about $2.00 in a jobbing way, with yellows a shade lower. Some dealers say whites should be $3.00 or higher. For March, 15 to 25 cents more is asked on all.

VICE-PRESIDENT A. H. GOODWIN, of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, reports liberal orders and inquiries from their southern customers for both bulk seeds and onion sets. Mr. Goodwin looks for an increase in prices of the latter as the season advances, believing wholesalers are not nearly as well stocked at this date as they were last January. The Barnard Company will open its store poultry show, January 21. Mr. Barnard does not plan to make a California trip this season.

CINCINNATI, O.—J. Charles McCulloch is in Florida on his winter vacation.

THE Dutch steamer Nieuw Amsterdam carrying, it is reported, 600 cases of horticultural products, arrived in New York, January 5.

THE 1919 catalogue of the Henry Field Seed Co., Shenandoah, Ia., while offering nearly all seeds prepaid, some of the heavier items are free only to include the fourth zone.

TOLEDO, O.—Cloyer closed steady January 4 at $25.15, a drop of 35 cents during the week. April timothy was 2½ cents lower. Cash was offered at $5.30, January $5.10, February $5.10, March $5.22½, April $5.22½, and September $5.75.

VISITED CHICAGO: Axel Knudsen, Minneapolis, Minn., representing L. Duchfeldt, Ltd., Odense, Denmark; Mrs. M. W. Johansen, representing the Johansen Sons' Co., El Monte, Calif.; Wm. Kueker, of the Farmer Seed & Nursery Co., Faribault, Minn.

DR. W. W. TRACY, of the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., will deliver an address at this year's inaugural meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, January 11, his subject being, "Varietal Adaptation of Culinary Vegetables to Local Conditions."

GUELPH, ONT.—At the convention of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association in this city December 10, officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: A. M. Maynard, Waltham, president; Prof. W. J. Squirrel, Guelph, vice-president; W. J. Lennox, Toronto, secretary-treasurer.

Henry Field on Rainbow Chasing.

Henry Field, of the Henry Field Seed Co., Shenandoah, Ia., uses two pages of his 1919 catalogue, telling the "peepul" about the other seedsman's humbug novelties. Henry seems to lack faith in "47-day" tomatoes, "35-day" potatoes, "Billion Dollar" grass and "Wonderberry." Henry poses in his shirt sleeves, critically inspecting seed tests. In claiming to have started the ear seed corn business in 1904, Henry is too young to remember that Vaughan's Chicago catalogue of 1885 (19 years earlier) offered seed corn in this manner. Some of the new names of Henry's vegetables do not sound like Dr. W. W. Tracy of the United States department of agriculture. Do not get too far in the lead, Henry.

Burpee's Annual for 1919.

The W. Atlee Burpee Co., Philadelphia, Pa., has issued Burpee's Annual for 1919, an attractive catalogue of 154 pages, a feature of which is the classification of all vegetables under four heads, namely, edible seeds, root crops, greens and salads and vegetable fruits. The items in each division are placed as warranted by their prominence and use, no effort being made to hold to a strictly botanical classification or to an alphabetical arrangement. About 50 pages of the Annual are devoted to the firm's offerings in flower seeds and bulbs, the whole indexed according to classifications for ready reference, with numerous illustrations, including 26 excellent color pages. The front cover page features Burpee's Giant Chinese pepper and Burpee's Blue Bantam pea, while the back presents an inviting illustration of Burpee's Netted Gem or Rocky Ford melon, both in colors. While the number of pages were curtailed in anticipation of a reduction of catalogue sizes by order of the pulp and paper division of the war industry.

Washington Rulings and Regulations.

Garden, Mammoth clover, pea, sugar beet and vegetable seeds have been removed from the export conservation list, effective January 1, 1919, according to announcement of the war trade board. Up to this time, in order to be able to export any of these seeds, it has been necessary to secure licenses from the war trade board and to face great delays in the movement of the merchandise. Hereafter the speed of the movement of exports will depend upon the availability of ocean tonnage.

Shrubs and flower seeds, except those of oil-bearing plants, may be exported freely to Denmark, Norway, Sweden or European Holland, under new regulations just promulgated by the war trade board, in which it is announced that licenses to export those commodities will be freely issued. It is announced that, so far as the board is concerned, the regulations as to consignment to associations, etc., will no longer be enforced for these commodities, and shipments may be consigned directly to the consignee named in the export license, or to order, provided they are shipped for account of a firm not on the enemy trading list. The regular export license application forms should be used, together with such supplemental sheets as required.

New crops of most of the important items are now ready and the balance are expected shortly. Do not delay ordering your supply of the kinds that should be sown early, such as Ageratum, Alyssum, Antirrhinum, Centaurea, Cobaea, Dracaena, Heliotrope, Moonflower, Lantana, Lobelia, Maurandia, Petunia, Pyrethrum, Salvia, Thunbergia, Verbena, Vinca, Etc.

We call the special attention of Florists to the following:

NEW SCARLET SAGE

"America" or "Globe of Fire"

This is without doubt the finest Scarlet Sage ever sent out. It is the earliest to come into bloom, and flowers continuously till the end of the season, and what is equally as important, it is absolutely uniform in growth, about 15 inches high, with the brilliant scarlet spikes thrown well above the plant making a total height of about 2 feet. The seed we offer is our own saving. 50c per trade pkt.; $4.00 per oz.

Shipments Embargoed from Atlantic Ports

A ten days' embargo on all exports and other overseas shipments from New York, Boston and Philadelphia went into effect January 2 as a result of labor troubles and congestion in the three ports. The embargo was decided upon by officials of the railroad administration, following the strike of marine workers in New York harbor. Although the embargo covers all export goods at the three Atlantic ports, it does not prohibit the shipment of grain at Boston.

Imports at New York.

Horticultural supplies were received at the above port during the week ending January 4, 1919, as follows:

From Liverpool, Eng.: McHutchison & Co., two cases Manetti stocks; to others, 39 bags seeds and six boxes plants. From Copenhagen, Denmark: T. Madsen & Co., 95 packages seeds; to others, 351 packages seeds. From Bordeaux, France: 39 cases seeds.

New York, January 6. — Celery (state), per bunch, 50 cents to $1.00; cucumbers, $1.00 to $2.75 per dozen; mushrooms, 75 cents to $1.75 per basket; tomatoes, per pound, 12 to 30 cents; lettuce, per package, 35 cents to $3.50; radishes, per 100 bunches, $3.00 to $5.00.

Ontario Agricultural Union.

The fortieth annual meeting of the Ontario Agricultural and Experimental Union will be held at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, January 14-15. An interesting programme has been arranged, among the features being the following papers and discussions by well-known authorities: "Report of Co-operative Experiments in Agriculture for 1918," by Dr. C. A. Zavitz, Guelph, secretary of the Union; "Result of Co-operative Experiments in the Eradication of Weeds," by Prof. J. E. Howitt; "Standardization of Seed Potatoes," by Prof. J. H. Barron, Ithaca, N. Y.; "Co-operation," by F. C. Hart, Toronto; W. E. Burnaby, Jefferson; R. W. Wade, Toronto and W. H. LeDrew, Guelph; "The Economic Use of the Tractor on the Ontario Farm," by Prof. R. Harcourt; "Economic Markets for Canadian Food Materials," by Dr. G. C. Steelman, Guelph. The officers of the union are as follows: Harvey B. Webster, St. Mary's, president; P. S. McLaren, Perth, vice-president; Dr. C. A. Zavitz, Guelph, secretary; A. W. Mason, Guelph, treasurer.

Vegetable Markets.

According to reports received by the bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture covering the period January 1-6, vegetable shipments were heavier and prices held steady to strong. Potato prices were firm in the west, but weakened slightly in the east. Carlots of Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin No. 1 sacked whites were steady at $1.80 to $1.90 at Chicago and strengthened to $1.75 to $1.80 f. o. b. Grand Rapids, Mich. Waupaca, Wis.; sales in jobbing markets ranged $2 to $2.15. Colorado No. 1 white sacked stock ranged stronger at $1.50 to $1.60 at Greeley. Cabbage prices followed the upward trend of the previous week. New York Danish seed advanced $1 to $2 per ton in western New York, ranging $22 to $26 per ton f. o. b. Wisconsin Holland made a similar advance, reaching $32 to $35 per ton at Chicago. The northern onion crop, estimated at 22,365 cars of 600 bushels each, compared with 21,213 cars in 1917 and about 13,000 cars in 1916, has been going out of the producing sections much faster than usual. Yellow and red stock was $1.60 to $1.75 per 100 pounds in consuming markets. All bean markets inclined downward, with the exception of California, which ranged steady.

Disinfecting Seed Potatoes.

One pint of 40 per cent formalin solution costing about 50 cents to 30 gallons of water, the same disinfectant as applied to wheat last fall to control smut can be used to control the common scab on Irish potatoes, according to the University of Missouri College of Agriculture, Columbia. This as well as several other potato diseases can be largely controlled where plantings are made on new land each year by disinfecting the seed before planting.

Ordinarily the seed are put into a sack and immersed in this solution for one and a half to two hours. It has been found that the treatment can be reduced to 15 minutes, if the solution is heated to 122 degrees F. Besides saving time, the treatment is probably more effective when the solution is warmed. The formalin solution can be used over and over again until it is gone. The seed must be treated before cutting and it is better if they can be spread out to dry after being treated.

The sweet potato is also attacked by several diseases carried on the seed tubers. For this reason they should be disinfected before bedding, where the diseases have caused loss in previous years. The material used is corrosive sublimate. One part to 1000 of water, or one ounce to eight gallons of water if a crude form is used. The powder should be dissolved in a little warm water, then made up to the right volume. The seed tubers are soaked in this for 10 minutes, just before bedding them in the hotbed. Both Irish and sweet potatoes are important crops and many growers could improve their results by practicing seed treatment.

Reclaiming the Desert.

Men have begun to reclaim the Californian desert by irrigation. The Imperial Valley is the first word in the bringing back of the waters to the thirsty land, but it is by no means the last. Towns like Brawley and Imperial now stand where the mesquite once grew and the coyote howled. The limit of man's progress in the valley is sharply defined. The "field" of alfalfa or grain faces the desert, the one wearing a fierce scowl, the other a gentle smile. Close by, live the desert's conquerors, big, upstanding folk, amid the softness of an eternal summer, says the Christian Science Monitor. The irrigation canals flow musically everywhere. The houses are ringed round with cloth-screened verandas, which do duty also as living and sleeping places. The people always seem to be on the defensive against the desert. But they have made it blossom like the rose, and are making it pay. Soon the desert of lost hopes, of burning heats, of intolerable mirages, and arid solitudes will be a land of teeming thousands and of plenty.

Wichita, Kan.

BLIZZARD HURTS CHRISTMAS TRADE.

Christmas, 1918, will need no special effort on the part of local florists to be remembered for some time to come. December 23-24 furnished the heaviest snow storm for 30 years, with temperature at freezing Monday morning, and falling to 4° below zero by Wednesday. As a result, the city was paralyzed by a blockade. Not a street car or motor bus moved for three days. Auto traffic was limited to a few delivery trucks and passenger cars on a few of the least blockaded streets. As a consequence, the heavy rush of buyers the last two days was sadly lacking, and the wonder was that there was any trade at all. Railroad traffic was tied up and out going shipments were practically all refused. As a result, the volume of business will probably total considerably less than last year. The high price of cut flowers also discouraged trade in that direction, and many customers, when told the price of cut flowers, turned to the plant tables and made their selection there. Plant sales were good, all things considered. Prices were slightly higher than in previous years, but stock was good, as a rule, and customers seemed to expect to pay well for it. Poinsettias still hold a high place. Good Lorraine and Cincinnati begonias and cyclamens ran about even. Much less holly and greens were used than in previous years.

American Association of Nurserymen.

J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., President; J. Edward Moon, Morrisville, Pa., Vice-President; Curtis Kye Smith, 19 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Secretary and Counsel. Forty-four annual convention will be held at Chicago in 1919.

TOWSON, Md.—The Towson Nurseries have acquired an adjoining tract of 45 acres.

MORRISVILLE, N. Y.—T. H. Townsend, formerly at the Dryden estate at Bernardsville, N. J., has been appointed horticulturist at the state school of agriculture here.

NEW YORK.—The Clair-Manor Nurseries have been incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000 by G. Nassauer, A. T. Scharus and H. K. Daly, 27 William street, this city.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The Indiana Horticultural Society has elected the following officers for 1919: F. J. Heacock, Salem, president; L. V. Doud, Denver, vice-president; H. H. Swain, Lafayette, secretary-treasurer.

Pruning.

In calling attention to the importance of pruning, the object of which is frequently misunderstood and the results looked upon with distrust, the Missouri Botanical Garden Bulletin for November says, in part, that with street and lawn trees the natural shape and habit should be preserved and all artificial shaping avoided. The operation of pruning should begin at the top and all cuts should be made close to the base of the limb and parallel to the axis of the trunk. Stubs should never be left. No matter how small the scar, a protective and disinfectant dressing should be applied immediately to prevent decay until the callus grows over the wound. Paint made of linseed oil and white lead or coal tar and various asphalt preparations make good dressings. Heavy pruning should be done in the fall or winter while the trees are in a dormant condition. Early spring or summer pruning is not advisable as the rapid flow of sap results in a check to the root system.

In ornamental shrubs, roses and vines, a balance should be maintained between the root system and the top by cutting back the individual branches about one-fourth, the general purpose being to aid the plant to assume its natural form and characteristic beauty, and therefore only diseased, interfering or misshapen growths should be removed, and the work should be done after flowering. Hardy perennials do not require severe pruning, being usually thinned out a trifle and the canes cut to two or three feet from the ground unless winter-killed. The shoots should be shortened after blooming so that strong new canes may be secured for the next season. Climbing roses need little attention except to keep them within bounds, allowing relatively few canes to grow.

Vine pruning consists of merely removing the old shoots and cutting back the straggling growths, the operation being performed after blooming. Vines which are grown for their ornamental fruits should be cut hard in the early spring, as they fruit on the new wood.

American Association of Nurserymen.

The executive committee of the market development organization of the American Association of Nurserymen, consisting of John Watson, Princeton; Jos. Howard, Pomona, N. C.; C. C. Burr, Manchester, Conn.; J. Edward Moon, Morrisville, Pa.; F. F. Rockwell, New York, and Robert Pyle, West Grove, Pa., held an important meeting January 7, at the Adelphia hotel, Philadelphia, Pa., to outline the work of the coming year.

URGENT.

Plant Imports Danger.

Unless the plant growers and nurserymen of the United States take prompt and vigorous action, it is likely that all imports of palms, azaleas, roses, rhododendrons, box and bay trees, etc., also general nursery stock, from Europe will be shut out under the proposed plan of the federal horticultural board unless the present programme of that body is changed.

What To Do.

Every florist, nurseryman and seedsmen should at once telegraph protests to his representatives in Congress, both Senate and House of Representatives, also to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chairman Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C.

Do It Today.

Washington, D. C.

OUTLOOK FOR 1919 PROMISING

The retail and wholesale establishments in this city have embarked on what gives promise to be the most successful year's business in the history of the trade in the national capital. Prices are two and three times as high as they were last year and the demand has greatly increased, first because of the added population; second, because of the recommencement of social activity; third, by reason of the large number of deaths that have occurred during the two visits of the influenza and, last, through the increased popularity of flowers as gifts. As a result, the market sells out clean each day. The customers do not seem to question the high prices and are paying them without protest. One can go through the line of flowers and say that good prices prevail and that the sale is as heavy as the supply, with the possible exception of orchids, which are obtainable at $9 per dozen, and cases are reported where the price quoted on quantities was considerably below that figure. Some few roses are bringing as high as $6 per dozen, the average running between $10 and $25 per hundred. American Beauty ranges in price from $6 to $12. With an increased number of weddings and added funeral work, the retailers find it necessary to get their orders in early each day, for in the afternoon few of these are to be had. Lily of the valley has been obtainable, but the price causes the retailers to think before investing very heavily. There is some demand for pussy willows and marguerites sell very well. There is a greater call this year than ever before for ferns, and for pot cyclamens and begonias in the absence of azaleas and rhododendrons. The continued dark weather has had the effect of shortening the supply of sweet peas, causing the buds to drop.

B. F. L.

Newport, R. I.

We had a green Christmas. The day felt like spring. The trade reports prices double and business 50 per cent better than last year. In flowers, carnations sold out, pink and red being best sellers. Roses sold well, Ophelia leading in favor. Eighteen inch stem American Beauties brought $8 per dozen. Violets were in demand and the supply short. In plants, poinsettias, begonias, solanums and heather were leaders. There was a brisk demand for individual plants in small handle baskets.

NOTE.

Stewart Ritchie reports a big trade in fancy made up Christmas greens. He had a grand stock of flowers and plants and did a big business.

EXCELLENT HOLIDAY BUSINESS.
 The holiday trade was exceptionally large this year, most of the florists selling out their stock long before the period was over. The scarcity of the stock, coupled with the extremely high prices necessitated by the existing conditions, seemed to have no effect whatever. People bought as never before, paying the prices in most instances without question. Artificial flowers were used extensively in funeral work, thereby helping materially. Prices on all cut flowers showed an advance of 50 to 100 per cent. over previous years. The Christmas plant trade was unusually heavy, with most florists selling out completely. The demand for Christmas greens was equal to if not greater than for Christmas, 1917. The call for flowers for New Year's was very satisfactory, the supply being much larger than for Christmas. This was caused by having bright and producing weather between those dates. The call for flowers since the first of the year has been brisk with funeral work constituting the chief demand.

NOTES.
 Clem Lanterrier, of the A. J. Lanterrier Co., was stricken with influenza Christmas afternoon, and Roy Brown, of the same firm, was taken down with the same epidemic the following Saturday. Both are getting along as well as could be expected.
 The Flick Floral Co. sold more high priced plants this year than ever before. This firm showed excellent specimens of azaleas and cyclamens. Corsage work was in excellent demand.
 Private George Pandell, of the Fort Wayne Flower Shop, while fighting on the French front the day previous to the signing of the armistice, suffered the loss of an arm.
 Miss Helen F. Patten, of the Patten Flower Shop, Toledo, O., spent several days with relatives in this city after the holidays.
 The Doswell Floral Co. was entirely sold out at 9 o'clock Christmas morning and closed their doors to the public.
 W. J. & M. S. Vesey cut 1,500 orchids for the holiday trade.

DEMAND GOOD AT SATISFACTORY PRICES.
 Trade during the past week has been very good, all stock selling well. While prices on cut flowers continue high, they move with the demand about balancing the supply. Carnations are holding at from $12 to $15 per 100, with roses at $20 to $40. Violets wholesale at from $2.50 to $3. Funeral orders continue brisk with a return of the influenza epidemic to this vicinity and all the local florists are getting their share of this work. Paper Whites are scarce and will be for some time. Several decorations for the new year observance created a demand for quite a little extra stock.
